Railroads Blame U. S. Policies for Traffic Loss

Power Projects Cited
Federal Shipping Hit
Waterways Compete
Wage Cut Asked

By the Associated Press.

A. F. Cleveland, a railroad witness, told the President's fact-finding board yesterday that Government activities had contributed directly to the loss in revenues the carriers contend make necessary a 15 per cent pay cut for their employes.

Testifying in support of the pay cut, Cleveland asserted that large Government expenditures for development of hydroelectric power had cut coal consumption, with a resultant heavy decline in freight revenues. Cleveland is vice president in charge of the traffic department of the Association of American Railroads.

Because of its expanding operations, Cleveland said, the Government has become one of the largest tonnage shippers in the country. He said this decreased revenue because much freight formerly shipped at commercial rates now must be handled at half rates.

(Land grant railroads may charge the Government only half rate on hauls over land grant mileage.)

Cites Waterway Aid

The railway executive asserted, too, that Government expenditures for improvement of waterways had helped increase water traffic, which took business from the railroads.

Rail revenues have declined, Cleveland continued, as air, water, motor truck shipping and travel and pipe line transportation has increased.

He contended that railroad jobs will be fewer if the roads are not able to obtain their "proper share" of the commercial traffic.

Charles M. Hay, counsel for 18 brotherhoods which have voted to strike rather than accept the pay cut, contends poorly paid and dissatisfied workers would prove more damaging to the railroads in their competitive efforts than any other factor.

Business Increase Minimized

"If you think that the men who are employed by the railroad will not give efficient service for the compensation that an impartial body decides is fair," interjected J. Carter Fort, counsel for the carriers, "I think you know less about your clients than I do."

Previously Hay had contended, in cross-examination of Dr. Julius H. Parmelee, that increasing business indicates there is no necessity for a wage reduction.

Parmelee, director of the Bureau of Railway Economics of the Association of American Railroads, said that while September carloadings exceeded those of any previous month this year, they still were 20 per cent below those of the same period last year.

Maker of Elixir Which Killed 70 Is Fined $16,800

Greeneville, Tenn., Oct. 3 (AP).—Samuel Evans Massengill was fined $16,800 today after he pleaded guilty to charges growing out of 70 deaths blamed on an elixir of sulfanilamide.

The Bristol, Va.-Tenn., drug manufacturer pleaded guilty to 112 violations of the pure food and drug act, the fine representing a $150 penalty on each of the 112, which District Attorney James B. Frazier said, was the largest fine ever imposed under the food and drug law. Frazier said 62 similar counts were pending in the U. S. District Court at Kansas City, Mo.

$40,000 Gems Stolen at Sea From Lawrence Tibbett's Wife

Liner Is Searched
Delayed in Docking
Federal Agents Called
Jewelry Was in Desk

San Pedro, Calif., Oct. 3 (AP).—Jewelry valued at $40,000 to $75,000 was stolen from Mrs. Lawrence Tibbett, wife of the concert singer, as the liner Monterey approached Los Angeles harbor, she reported today.

Mrs. Tibbett was accompanied by her husband, Federal Bureau of Investigation agents, hurriedly called to the harbor, boarded the liner and searched staterooms and baggage before any passengers were permited to disembark, causing a three-hour delay in landing.

Tibbett, returning from a concert tour of Australia and New Zealand, said the jewelry was insured. It was in an unlocked bureau drawer in the stateroom, he said.

Green Calls Goal of CIO, Reds Identical

Quotes Lewis to Prove It
Cites Speech of 1924
Two Unions Urge Truce

By the Associated Press.

Houston, Tex., Oct. 3.—William Green shook his fist today and caustically accused John L. Lewis of leading an industrial union movement that Lewis labeled 14 years ago as "one of the objectives of the Communist International."

The president of the American Federation of Labor, opening its national convention, couched his keynote speech in bristling terms as he attacked the C. I. O. chairman.

Green said that Lewis in 1924 gave a Senate committee a statement charging Communists were attempting to gain control of the American Federation of Labor to reach an objective of "one big union."

"He is now engaged in leading a movement which has that very thing for its objective," Green said, amid the shouts of the delegates, assembled in Houston's Coliseum.

Green produced a newspaper clipping describing a speech Lewis delivered last month at the Latin-American Trade Union Congress in Mexico City. Green pictured Lewis addressing a throng of "denim-clad workers" waving red flags in a bull ring in Mexico City. He termed the bull ring a "fitting and appropriate place" for the speech.

Green turned to labor legislation and thundered:

"American labor will not tolerate governmental control—governmental dictation."

He branded the National Labor Relations Board "an ally of the C. I. O.," and added, "We won't stand for that."

He asserted the federation would ask Congress to amend the Wagner labor act and then urged American employers to accept the doctrine of the American Federation of Labor. He asked employers to accord labor collective bargaining rights and urged them to pay wages as high as industry can bear.

Before stepping down from the rostrum, President Green read what he said were the words of Lewis be-

'Reckless Riding' In Park Costs Equestrian $5

Polly, a chestnut mare, was as gay as the autumn Sunday as she dashed around the Polo Grounds with William N. Collins, 25, of 412 Twelfth street southeast, in the saddle. So Park Policeman Reynold Bartmess took Collins to Traffic Court yesterday on a charge of fast and reckless riding. Collins pleaded guilty and explained he did not know there was a regulation restricting the pace of horses.

Judge Hobart Newman fined him $5.

Cancer Drive Opens; New Center Begun

To Lend U. S. Radium
Building Is Started
'Cyclotron' Discussed

Cancer, which has baffled scientists and specialists for centuries, was attacked on four fronts yesterday as the National Advisory Cancer Council met at the National Institute of Health here.

Results were:

Way was paved for loan of the National Cancer Institute's $200,000 supply of radium to hospitals and clinics.

A report on a new instrument for bombarding cancer cells was read to the Advisory Council.

Plans for a special comparative study to weigh efficiency of types of cancer treatment were outlined by the United States Public Health Service.

Members of the Advisory Council took part in the groundbreaking ceremony at the site of the new $600,000 National Cancer Institute building, near Bethesda, Md., which is to become the American center for cancer research.

Radium Treatment Free

The council approved rules governing loan of the Government-owned radium drawn by the institute, leaving necessary only completion of the regulations by a special committee of the institute here "in the near future" before the 9½-gram supply of radium will be loaned out, it was said.

Regulations set out that hospitals using the Government-owned radium cannot charge cancer patients for the actual radium treatment. Contracts providing loans of radium for one year periods only, subject to renewal, are also provided.

A small portion of the radium is housed now at the Bureau of Standards which, under regulations, must inspect "potency," or radioactivity, of all radium when it is loaned out and returned.

Cyclotron Discussed

This check is made to determine if there is any deterioration in the radium, which physicists say loses one-half of its potency every 1,700 years. Applicants must put up insurance against fire, theft or deterioration of the radium sought before its loaned.

A report on Prof. E. O. Lawrence's work with the "cyclotron," an instrument for shattering atoms, at the California Institute of Technology, was made by Dr. Arthur H. Compton, of the University of Chicago.

The cyclotron is used to obtain heavy voltages for producing new radio-active substances and for bombarding neutrons loose from the nuclei of atoms. The neutrons, heavy, and similar to the positively charged protons, are without electrical charge. Dr. Lawrence and his brother, of the Yale University Medical School staff, have been

Girl's Body Fed to Alligators, Roadhouse Inquiry Is Told

By the United Press.

San Antonio, Tex., Oct. 3.—A gruesome story of the alleged feeding of the body of a young white woman to five alligators was told today in the investigation of the disappearances of several women who worked for the late Joe Ball at his Elmendorf road house.

J. P. Cain, constable for the Elmendorf precinct, offered to send to Texas Ranger Lee Miller a witness who allegedly surprised Ball as he carried the limp body from the rear of his tavern to the alligator pit.

Cain said that the man was threatened by Ball and left Elmendorf, but returned after Ball's suicide a week ago. Cain refused to reveal the man's identity until officers promised to protect him against any attempt by Ball's neighbors to "shut him up."

Justice of the Peace Raymond Gerhardt revealed today that letters found in Ball's home revealed that several of the women who disappeared from the road house previously had visited maternity homes.

The justice of the peace said that the letters revealed that the woman known as Minnie Gerhardt was

Unions Deny 'Slow-up' on Federal Jobs

U. S. Officials Agree
Find No Shirking
NLRB Up to Schedule
Baker Sees 'Outrage'

Reports that a "slow-up strike" is being agitated by Federal employes' unions in Washington and Baltimore, causing delay in routine work, were emphatically denied here yesterday by Government officials and spokesmen for the unions.

First to make a denial that a union had fostered a slow-up was Jacob Baker, president, United Federal Workers of America, a C. I. O. affiliate, whose members were charged with "aggressively going to the front for disgruntled employes and soliciting complaints from new and temporary employes."

Blames the War Crisis

Baker stated: "It may be the thirst for sensation that the recent crisis in Europe has engendered, or it may be need to fill up the Monday editions, but we saw on the part of some of the press today a new low in round-about insinuation and in attack upon a splendid body of American citizens. To accuse Government workers of concerted efforts at inefficiency is ridiculous. It is more than ridiculous, it is outrageous.

"One of the most heartening things about the Federal establishment is the fact that as new functions have been developed under the New Deal, workers have come into the Government working long and zealously without count of effort or hours. That still goes wherever necessary, whether it be the Social Security Board, the National Labor Relations Board, or the old established departments," he declared.

Baker denied that his union has a local in the National Labor Relations Board. It has been alleged that the NLRB was from one to three months behind in its routine work.

An acute situation also was charged as existing in the Baltimore office of the Social Security Board. "The agency, which has a strong C. I. O. union, is behind in clerical routine from one to three months," it was charged.

Corson Sees No Shirking

In answer to this, Dr. John J. Corson, director of the SSB bureau of old-age insurance, asserted that a review of the operating charts of the bureau's accounting operations section in Baltimore "proves that rather than being one to three months behind, our production operations are a week to 10 days ahead of schedule."

"We have not and do not contemplate calling in experts to speed up our production system," Dr. Corson stated. "In fact, production of operators is at present up to and beyond budget estimates submitted a year ago."

Concerning union relations, he said: "Relationships with each of the several employe organizations have been wholly pleasant and cooperative."

Next, Nathan Witt, secretary, NLRB, denied that the board is one to three months in arrears of work, asserting: "If the board is behind in its schedule it is not due to delays in its clerical and mechanical operations but rather to a limited appropriation which has prevented the

'Mercy' Driver Hits Md. Farmer But Saves Patient

Berlin, Md., Oct. 3 (AP).—Harold J. Lynch, 20, of Frankford, Del., ran against heavy odds but won in his race against time, while rushing a stricken relative to a Salisbury hospital for an appendicitis operation.

En route to the hospital with his patient, his automobile struck Garley Lewis, 53, Whaleyville farmer.

Lynch halted, found Lewis suffering from a skull fracture and smashed arm and loaded him in the automobile. But Lewis regained consciousness, refused to be taken to a hospital and the Frankford man took him to his Whaleyville home.

Meanwhile Lynch's relative groaned from pains in his appendix. Once more Lynch resumed his race to the Salisbury hospital. Then he thought of the State law which made it his duty to report accidents. Further delays resulted as Lynch stopped 2 miles from Salisbury at the State police station and gave details of how his car had struck and injured Lewis.

Again Lynch jumped into his automobile and sped on the final run to the hospital, where an immediate operation on the relative was performed—successfully.

Financial Crisis

By John Elliott.
Special Cable to The Post.

Paris, Oct. 3.—The French franc dropped to a new low today on the eve of the extraordinary session of the Chamber of Deputies to discuss France's diplomatic policy.

Tomorrow the chamber will have its first debate on foreign affairs since last February. Since then Reichsfuehrer Hitler has added Austria and part of Czechoslovakia to his third Reich, and the basis of French foreign policy has been entirely altered.

There is certain to be some plain speaking on this subject. In fact, some of the more timid souls want the government to choke off the debate and send the deputies home after reading of a governmental declaration, on the ground the airing of the French internal dissension at present would only weaken France's influence abroad.

Franc Nearing Bottom

The recent international crisis has distracted attention from this country's perennial financial crisis, but now it is cropping up again. Today the franc was quoted at 178.98 to the pound sterling. This is only 2 centimes above what Premier Daladier fixed as the lowest valuation the French government would permit the franc to reach when last April he effected France's most recent devaluation operation.

Today it was even lower than at the time of the latest financial crisis when Daladier precipitated a domestic political storm involving the resignation of two cabinet ministers by decreeing a modification of the controversial 40-hour week in order to restore confidence in the international situation.

Will Ask Money Power

The government has precious little to show for the costly partial mobilization it ordered to stop Germany, since Hitler got virtually everything he asked for in the Munich accord. But now the Daladier cabinet must face the bill for its futile military demonstrations.

It is generally believed the government will ask Parliament to approve some measure to restore financial order before it goes home again at the end of the week, but whether it will be a raise of the legal limits of advances the Bank of France is

Rabbit Cornea Grafted on Eye Of Maryland Man

Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 3 (AP).—A whole cornea from a rabbit has been transplanted to the right eye of Frank L. Hoffman, 61, a blind laborer, Dr. Paul N. Fleming said tonight.

Dr. Fleming said he performed the surgery last Tuesday and Hoffman has been able to see light for the first time since May when he was blinded by chemicals from a spraying machine while working in a stable.

"We won't be able to tell definitely if the operation is successful for two or three weeks," Dr. Fleming said. "He hadn't anything to lose. In the past few days he has been able to see light."

In Baltimore, a Johns Hopkins Medical School specialist said similar attempts had been made unsuccessfully in the past. The rabbit cornea, he said, "invariably" became opaque after several weeks.

Dr. Fleming is a graduate of the University of Maryland Medical School, class of 1913.

First U. S. Envoy to Prague Killed Hunting in Virginia

Richard Crane Dies
Shot Accidentally
Owned Byrd Estate
Honored by Czechs

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Richmond, Va., Oct. 3.—Richard Crane, first United States Minister to Czechoslovakia and owner of Westover, one of Virginia's most historic estates, was accidentally killed with his own gun today while hunting rail birds. He was 56.

Dr. J. R. Parker, Charles County, coroner, said Crane's gun discharged as he stepped from a boat in marshlands on the famous James River plantation.

Crane was widely known in Virginia society as a sportsman and patron of the arts. His home, Westover, was the ancestral mansion of the Byrd family and is considered one of the finest colonial estates in Tidewater Virginia.

Appointed by President Wilson as the first American Minister to Prague, Crane remained in Czechoslovakia from 1919 to 1921, two critical years of the republic's history. He was awarded the great cross of the Order of the White Lion by the Prague government and the Order of Polonia Restituta by Poland.

Taylor Warns Reich to Relax Anti-Semitism

Pressure Causes Flight
Co-operation Needed
Refugee Aid Difficult

Special Dispatch to The Post.

New York, Oct. 3.—Myron C. Taylor, vice chairman of the Intergovernmental Committee on Political Refugees, tonight warned that Germany must "relax the unceasing pressure" on Jews if it is to have the co-operation of other governments in solving the problem of mass emigration.

He said he was confident the German government "will recognize that extreme persecution is unnecessary to accomplish the emigration of these unwanted people from Germany, and said the Berlin attitude is "driving those people to flight rather than to organized emigration."

In an address prepared for delivery before the Council on Foreign Relations, the American "ambassador at large" said:

"The present situation has brought death to hundreds, disaster to hundreds of thousands, and fear to millions. * * It has fanned the flames of hatred and added new fears and prejudices to a world already burdened with gigantic problems of unemployment, economic uncertainty and distress."

Pointing to difficulties encountered by the international committee created to find new homes for the Jews driven from Germany, he recounted the unemployment problems in practically all countries and the immigration quotas that restricted entrance.

All of the nations consulted, he reported, are willing to receive farm workers, but there are relatively few agriculturists among the emigrants. The solution of the problem, he predicted, will require that many be trained in farm or other pursuits for which there is a demand.

The idea of finding vast undeveloped areas and of creating in them entirely new communities appeals to the imagination, Taylor said, but no large project of the type has been found practicable.

Hitler Tours Sudetenland With Henlein

Ours Forever, He Vows
Visits Asch-Eger Area
Will Go Back Today

By Melvin K. Whiteleather
Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

With the German Army of Occupation in Sudetenland, Oct. 3.—Reichsfuehrer Hitler rode victoriously into the Sudetenland today and proclaimed the region part of Germany with the pledge that "never again will this land be torn away from the Reich."

He entered the Sudetenland with his soldiers, airplanes, armored cars and artillery. The populace, cheering wildly, strewed his path with flowers and shouted, "We thank our Fuehrer!"

The chancellor rode in triumph for 40 miles through Zone Three of the newly acquired territory, completing the procession at dusk and returning to Germany.

Tonight he went to Hof, not far west of Eger, to sleep in his special train. Tomorrow he will return to the Sudetenland to visit Graslitz, Bleistadt, Falkenau and Koenigsberg.

Hitler began the procession at 11:16 a. m. (5:15 a. m., E. S. T.), at Wildenau, half a mile from Asch, heart of the Sudetenland ceded to Germany by Czechoslovakia.

About three hours earlier, at 8:05 a. m., 2,000 soldiers of the German army under Gen. Walther Von Insurgents said the bread was a gift to the people of Madrid in honor of the second anniversary of Generalissimo Franco's accession to the post of chief of state in insurgent territory.

Welles Urges World to Keep New-Won Peace by Justice

By William V. Nessly.

Striking to wrest from the terror-filled days of the Czechoslovakian war threat "a new world order based upon justice and upon law," Undersecretary of State Sumner Welles last night called for:

Limitation and reduction of armaments.

A world-wide agreement to end air attacks on civilian populations.

Economic reconstruction "without which there can be neither international stability nor well-being."

In a review of this government's energetic peace-preservation activities preceding the Munich settlement, Welles revealed that on last Tuesday "information of unquestioned authenticity" was received here that Germany's Chancellor Hitler had fixed 2 p. m. of the following day as the time for entrance of his armies into Czechoslovakia, the step fearfully awaited as certain to start a new world war.

It was this information that led to President Roosevelt's second appeal to Hitler for peace, an appeal that was followed by Berlin's calling of the Munich conference that 'I Am Not Ashamed'

By Joseph Driscoll.
Special Cable to The Post.

London, Oct. 3.—"I have nothing to be ashamed of," Prime Minister Chamberlain declared heatedly in the House of Commons today in defending his "peace with honor" which dismembered Czechoslovakia and gave the Sudetenland to Reichsfuehrer Hitler.

Jeered by opposition critics who called him "Hitler's Man Friday" and "Hitler's postman," Chamberlain stuck grimly to his thesis that the harsh terms of the Munich peace could be justified on the ground they had averted a second world war.

He expressed sympathy for what remains of Czechoslovakia, and revealed Prague had asked Britain to underwrite a loan of £30,000,000 ($150,000,000) to help put the mangled country back on its feet. Chamberlain announced his government was immediately advancing £10,000,000 ($50,000,000) to Czechoslovakia for its urgent needs, without waiting for the loan to be floated.

Motives Questioned

Laborites, while approving of this financial assistance to a needy nation, questioned the motive behind the prime minister's generosity.

"Conscience money," cried one critic.

"Give it out of your own pocket," cried another.

"Charge 8 per cent interest," shouted a third.

Chamberlain was nettled by the constant flow of jibes and insults across the aisle, but he ignored much of the hostile barrage that emanated from the Laborites and Liberals. Actually, the most effective attacks upon the foreign policy at Berchtesgaden and Munich came from the Conservative side and from two of the prime minister's erstwhile cabinet lieutenants.

Calls Maps "Deceptive"

They were Alfred Duff Cooper, who resigned Saturday as first lord of the admiralty, because Chamberlain had not taken a firm stand against Hitler, and Anthony Eden, who resigned last February as foreign secretary, because Chamberlain negotiated an Anglo-Italian accord with Mussolini, though the latter would not withdraw troops from Spain.

Eden accused the Chamberlain government of publishing "deceptive" maps in an effort to prove the Munich terms were much milder than Hitler's Godesberg ultimatum, and more like the writ-

Court Mourns Cardozo; Opens New Term

McReynolds Is Absent
Black, Reed Move Up
Hughes Gives Eulogy

By the United Press.

A little, white-haired man who spoke in kindly whispers was missing yesterday as the Supreme Court opened its 1938-39 term and solemnly paid tribute to his memory.

All but one of the eight living justices were in the somber chamber as Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes eulogized their late colleague Benjamin N. Cardozo, who died last July a few weeks after conclusion of the court term.

At the long mahogany bar where the course of history often is changed there were two vacant seats. But all eyes were focused on the chair Cardozo had occupied when he succeeded the late Oliver Wendell Holmes. The other chair was that of Justice James F. McReynolds, who had absented himself from the proceedings.

Black, Reed Move Up

A death-like silence filled the crowded room as Hughes said that the tribunal had "suffered an irreparable loss in the death of one of our brothers" since its last meeting in June. He told how he and his colleagues were "inexpressibly saddened."

Eighteen minutes after convening the court recessed until next Monday, when the first orders of the year will be announced.

Cardoza's death caused a new shuffle in the tribunal's seating arrangement, the third in the last year. For Justice Hugo L. Black, who today celebrates the first anniversary of assuming membership on the bench, and Justice Stanley F. Reed, it meant new seats on the basis of advancing a notch in seniority.

Frankfurter May Succeed

As Hughes' praise of Cardozo filled the chamber, the Capital speculated on his successor, and possibility that Felix Frankfurter, Harvard Law School professor and adviser to several presidents, might fill the vacancy.

Referring to Cardozo's contributions to jurisprudence, Hughes said that at a "time when he should have enjoyed the full exercise of his remarkable powers he was fatally stricken and we are inexpressibly saddened by this tragic termination of his judicial service and the breaking of our cherished ties of personal association."

He traced Cardozo's career from his admission to the New York bar at the age of 21 and described him as an "ideal judge" because of his "erudition, acumen and technical skill combined with a philosophic outlook and a passion for justice." Cardozo's career, he said, was "one of the most illustrious in American annals."

McReynolds' Absence Normal

Although no explanation was given for McReynolds' absence from today's ceremonies, he frequently does not attend routine sessions or sessions at which he has no opinions to present.

The chamber was filled to capacity and more than 200 spectators lined the corridor outside. Among those attending were Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, Solicitor General Robert H. Jackson, Assistant Attorney General James W. Morris and Assistant Solicitor General Golden W. Bell.

After the brief session, the solicitor general said argument of the TVA case had been postponed from October 17 to November 14 because of the nomination of one of the Government's attorneys, John Lord O'Brian, by the Republican Party as its candidate for Senator from New York.

O'Brian Asked to Continue

Argument of the case had been scheduled tentatively for October 19.

"I have asked Mr. O'Brian to continue his assignment to participate in argument of this case," Jackson said. "He was not assigned to the argument because of political considerations and would not be relieved because of political considerations.

"We are not unappreciative of the compliment implied when the Republican convention finds its best man for this high office on the legal staff of this Administration."

Arguments will begin next Monday on cases which the court, before its recess last spring, agreed to review. Among the petitions awaiting action is an appeal by Thomas J. Mooney, serving a life sentence in San Quentin Penitentiary for complicity in the 1916 Preparedness Day bombing in San Francisco. There are also several controversies growing out of interpretations of the national labor relations act, including the Ford Motor Co. case.

Monthly Drop In Accidents Shown Here

Record Predicted
Injuries Decline
Deaths 7 Under 1937

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Every month this year has brought a reduction in District traffic injuries and accidents from figures for corresponding periods for 1937, Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer revealed yesterday.

Van Duzer predicted an all-time District safety record by the end of the year. Last month, he said, 100 less accidents were reported and personal injuries dropped 65 below September of 1937.

The accident figure last month was 859 and injuries reported were 292.

The September record, however, was marred by an increase of two deaths over the 1937 month. Four persons were killed last month.

Thus far this year, fatalities total 65—7 below the mark at this time in 1937.

"Constant hammering on the traffic question," said Van Duzer, "is largely responsible for improved conditions. But we must keep on hammering if the motoring public is to remain awakened and conscious of the problem."

As part of a permanent highway safety program, The Washington Post-Junior Board of Commerce traffic safety institute is ready to begin operations. First sessions will be held October 28.

Ranking local and national traffic control experts are scheduled to conduct weekly safety seminars. Plans are being prepared to broadcast the series of 10 meetings.

The Premier Cab Co. yesterday joined The Post-Junior Board safe driving movement. Jack Royer, manager of the taxi concern, pledged the company's entire personnel to support of District safety measures.

In an analysis of child traffic fatalities since January 1, the Keystone Automobile Club yesterday reported that "girls have apparently learned their safety lessons better than boys."

A total of 10 youngsters—7 boys and 3 girls—were killed during the period, said George Keneipp, club manager. He based his study on cases involving children between 5 and 14. Six youngsters under 5 have been fatally injured this year.

"It may be said that boys generally play more actively, but it also follows that they take more chances, run greater risks and consequently are involved in a larger number of fatal accidents," Keneipp added.

73,000 Ships Come To U. S. in 1938

Arriving from foreign ports, 73,558 vessels made entries at United States custom houses in the fiscal year 1938, an increase of 1.2 per cent from the preceding fiscal year, the Bureau of Customs announced yesterday. Totals include entries at Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands, Hawaii and Alaska with those for the continental United States.

"These words are included in this statement prepared by the chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization, the dual movement established in America for the purpose of destroying the American Federation of Labor," Green continued. "Now in this statement there are set forth nine objectives of this Communist conspiracy formed by this revolutionary movement. Time forbids me reading all, but I will read two: The seventh is, 'Seizure of the American Federation of Labor, with the ouster of its officials and through such seizure gaining control of all its affiliated unions and trade unions.

"That is a specific objective," Green continued. "Here is another: Conversion of all craft trade unions into single units of workers within an industry, known as industrial unions.

"That was the objective, we were told, of the Communists. You understand that, don't you?" the federation president asked. "What is the C. I. O. trying to do now? That very thing, realize that very objective as set forth in this document, penned and prepared by the chairman of the Committee for Industrial Organization."

Recognition of industrial unionism for workers in the basic mass production industries and reopening of peace negotiations with the C. I. O. was requested in a resolution by the Hotel and Restaurant Employes International Alliance.

The Stove Moulders' International Union also filed a resolution asking "more harmonious co-operation and less antagonism" between the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O.

Other resolutions called for reaffiliation with Labor's Non-Partisan League, which the A. F. of L. left a year ago on the grounds it was controlled by the C. I. O.; employment of American citizens only on the Panama Canal, to protect it in war time, and extension of social security to seamen.

The metal trades department called for revision of the Wagner act and the wage-hour law.

Defends Labor Board

Dr. Edwin A. Elliott, of Fort Worth, regional director of the National Labor Relations Board, turned to the record tonight to answer accusations that the board is partial to the C. I. O.

"The record," he said, "shows that in 41 cases which were acutely controversial, the board ruled in favor of the A. F. of L. in 21 cases and in favor of the C. I. O. in 16 cases. In the remaining four cases, the board upheld some of the contentions of each organization."

Chairman Arthur J. Altmeyer, of the Social Security Board told the convention that money paid to beneficiaries, "and thus turned into buying power for several million people," totaled $1,200,000,000 by September.

Used for Necessities

The total included about $910,000,000 paid out for public assistance since February, 1936; $7,500,000 in single cash and death claims paid since the old-age insurance program went into operation in January, 1937, and about $300,000 in unemployment compensation benefits paid since January, 1938.

"Used, as it must be, to buy the necessities of life," Altmeyer said, "that billion dollars has flowed back into the mainstream of business in every community throughout the country."

"All of us hope for a broadening of the existing provisions, as well as for some additions" to the social security act.

Industrialists Ask Showdown On Nazi Charge

Protest Blanket Blame
Sees Industry Injured
Dies Promises Inquiry

The National Association of Manufacturers yesterday called on the Dies committee investigating "un-American" activities for further investigation and identification in charges that certain industrialists have aided Nazi and Fascist forces in America.

Chairman Dies (Democrat), of Texas, later advised the association that a committee agent would make the further inquiry.

Charles R. Hook, association president, wrote to the Texan that the N. A. M. board had directed a request for "the fullest investigation" in order that "the names of those giving financial support or moral encouragement to such alien movements can be identified before the public."

Praises Red Investigation

He wrote that it was not sufficient to "stop with allegations against 'certain high industrialists,'" adding that "this must inevitably be a reflection upon all industrialists."

He said Dies' committee "has performed a genuine service already in exposing the machinations of communism in America," and added:

"If you can now perform the same operation," he went on, "in exposing the extent to which Nazi and Fascist organizations are maneuvering under cover, you will indeed have performed a public service of the highest order."

Dies replied that he had directed a further investigation by John Metcalfe, who had testified that while he was a member of the German-American Bund he had heard that "certain high industrialists" were friendly to the Bund.

Further Inquiry Ordered

"I have instructed Mr. Metcalfe," Dies wrote, "to investigate these statements to the fullest extent possible and to submit to this committee any evidence that he can secure which tends to show what industrialists, if any have contributed any funds to the Nazi and Fascist movements in the United States, or have done anything else to encourage such movements."

Dies said he had sent telegrams and subpenaed a number of witnesses to appear before the committee today, when he hopes more evidence of Nazi and Fascist activities would be developed. He declined to identify the witnesses.

The Political Arena

Bulkley Says President Wants No Third Term
Mass. G. O. P. Considers Townsend Plank

Doubt that President Roosevelt is considering running for a third term was expressed yesterday by an Administration Senator.

BULKLEY.

Fresh from a visit with with the Chief Executive at Hyde Park, Senator Robert J. Bulkley, of Ohio, said here he did not think Mr. Roosevelt wanted another four years in the White House, adding, acording to the Associated Press, that he did not think the President had "such a thing in mind at all."

The statement came in the wake of growing speculation on the 1940 intentions of Mr. Roosevelt. Senator Lewis, Democrat, of Illinois, another Administrator supporter, recently said a third term "would destroy the Democratic Party," a sentiment shared by Senator Burke, Democrat, of Nebraska, while several Democratic governors and a number of labor groups have urged the Preisdent to become the party niminee again.

Boston, Oct. 3 (AP).—While interest focused on whether the Republican State convention would adopt a Townsend old-age penson plank, Leverett Saltonstill, the Republican nominee for Governor, tonight asserted the solution of social and labor problems "rests upon security for the aged and opportunity for the young."

The convention's resolutions committee, meanwhile, was at work on a draft platform.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Oct. 3 (AP).—Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), Michigan, called upon Michigan Republicans here today to embark upon a "spiritual crusade" to "give this chastened American system a full, fair chance."

Delivering the keynote address at the Republican State convention, he said he spoke "on the eve of a great Republican victory, in Michigan and in America," which, he predicted, would be a "preview of 1940."

Virginia Power Co. To Float Bonds

Virginia Electric & Power Co. yesterday filed an amendment to its registration statement covering $37,500,000 of 3⅛ per cent series B first and refunding mortgage bonds, to be offered Wednesday at 103½. The bonds are due September 1, 1968.

The offering price to the public is estimated by the registrant at $38,812,500, with proceeds after commissions and discounts put at $38,062,500.

Republicans Win City Election in Stamford, Conn.

New Haven, Conn., Oct. 3 (AP).—Connecticut Republicans, whose party fortunes sank to the lowest ebb in history two years ago with President Roosevelt's 100,000 vote victory, regained control today of Stamford, largest of the 100 or more communities which balloted for municipal offices.

The second biggest prize at stake, Middletown, remained in the Democratic column. Charles E. Moore, Republican, won at Stamford and Charles A. Schaeffer, Democrat incumbent at Middletown.

On the basis of incomplete returns from the "small town" elections, Republicans apparently tightened their grip on the rural areas.

Convictions of 9 As Black Legion Plotters Upset

Lansing, Mich., Oct. 3 (AP).—Convictions of nine alleged members of the Black Legion for a reputed publisher murder plot were upset today by the State Supreme Court and new trials ordered.

The "unsupported and contradicted" testimony of Dayton Dean, triggerman in a Black Legion murder for which he is serving life imprisonment, and prosecution errors formed the basis for the decision.

The men were found guilty in Wayne County (Detroit) Recorder's Court 18 months ago of plotting to kill the late Arthur L. Kingsley, Highland Park, Mich., publisher and political enemy of one defendant. Dean was a prosecution witness.

Earle Inquiry Law Upset by State Court

Jury Probe Upheld
Suspension Invalidated
2 Investigations Set

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, Oct. 3.—The Pennsylvania Supreme Court cleared the way today for simultaneous grand jury and legislative investigations of bribery, conspiracy and extortion charges against Gov. Earle and 13 of his Democratic associates.

Set aside by the court were laws, hastily enacted in a special session of the General Assembly, which had given the Legislature prior right to conduct the inquiry. The court directed the Dauphin County (Harrisburg) grand jury to proceed.

The opinion ruled the act suspending the grand jury inquiry was unconstitutional and termed it "an attempt to suspend criminal laws and an invasion of judicial powers."

Attorney General Disqualified

While upholding a law granting attorneys general "absolute discretion" to supersede district attorneys, the court ruled that Attorney General Guy K. Bard, appointed by Earle, was "disqualified on the face of the case" from replacing District Attorney Carl B. Shelley, of Dauphin County.

The court recalled at the same time that Earle had charged Shelley, a Republican, with having "politics" as a motive, and directed Judge Paul N. Schaffer to conduct a hearing to determine whether Shelley or an attorney from another county should direct the grand jury proceedings.

Inquiries to Run Month

The legislative committee, authorized a month ago by the court to conduct its own inquiry, now is knee-deep in testimony at Pennsylvania's capital.

Both inquiries likely will run well into if not far beyond the November election in which Republicans hope to upset the Earle "Little New Deal" which came to Pennsylvania power in 1934 after a half-century of Republican State control.

The charges being investigated grew out of statements in the Democratic primary campaign last spring. They have been denied by Earle and the others named. Earle summoned the special session of the Legislature to pass laws bringing the inquiry "into the open." The grand jury proceedings are secret.

Police Court Starts to Clear Crowded Docket

Police Court jury branch was opened for the first time since August 25 yesterday when Judge Edward M. Curran began impaneling jurors to hear 560 cases accumulated in the summer months.

The cases piled up in the last five weeks because Police Court was not assigned a Municipal Court judge to fill in during vacations.

The trials pending include 300 United States cases, 60 District cases, all dealing with alcohol beverage regulations, and 200 traffic cases.

Treasury Shake-up May Delay Revising of U. S. Bank Agencies

Comptroller's Office 'Purge' Effective
O'Connor Friends Are Shifted to FDIC
Morgenthau Expects Delano to Be Co-operative

The recent "purge" of top officials in the office of Comptroller of the Currency, carried out under Secretary Morgenthau's direction yesterday dragged into the spotlight the question of reorganizing Government banking agencies.

The official opinion was that the shake-up would be followed by an era of better teamwork among the comptroller's office, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Board, and that, in consequence, reorganization would be delayed for some time.

Some sources said eventual rearrangement of functions of the banking agencies was inevitable. Legislation for reorganization of banking agencies, however, is held unlikely at the next session of Congress.

The Treasury view was that appointment of Preston Delano, a distant relative of President Roosevelt, as comptroller, and of Cyril B. Upham, banking adviser to Morgenthau, as first deputy, would result in another co-operation between Morgenthau and the comptroller's office.

Morgenthau has emphasized that Delano will be allowed to "run his own shop." At the same time, there is every indication that the comptroller's office hereafter will be expected to "play ball" according to the Secretary's rules. Morgenthau feels that since the national bank supervisory agency is part of the Treasury, he is responsible for the way it is operated.

Upham, who was sworn in Saturday as first deputy, yesterday took over the comptroller's office until Delano takes office about three weeks hence.

Upham's desk yesterday was almost hidden with bulging bouquets of fall flowers. These gifts were from Morgenthau, Chairman Leo T. Crowley of the FDIC, and the American Bankers Association. A number of friends called during the day to extend congratulations.

Meanwhile, Marshall R. Diggs, first deputy, and, consequently, Acting Comptroller until October 1, and G. J. Oppegard, who had been a deputy comptroller under J. T. F. O'Connor, showed up for work yesterday morning as members of the FDIC legal staff. Diggs and Oppegard were "purged" from the comptroller's office, but have been given jobs in the FDIC until January 1.

Occasional personality clashes reportedly occurred between Morgenthau and O'Connor when the latter was comptroller. With a new comptroller believed to be of a less individualistic turn coming in, it was deemed advisable to "clean house."

From the standpoint of policy, the changes are believed to signify a more rigid supervision of national banks, particularly with respect to certain local situations.

Senator William H. Smathers, New Jersey Democrat, intends to reintroduce at the next session of Congress a bill offered at the last session transferring the FDIC to the Treasury as a bureau of deposit insurance and transforming the comptroller's office into a Treasury bureau of bank supervision.

Treasury officials participated in the discussions which led to this bill being drafted.

Pigeon Carries Note to Governor, Refuses to Leave

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 3 (AP).—When the Governor of Indiana sent a message to the Governor of Illinois by homing pigeon today, after delivering the message the bird perched on a ledge 20 feet high in Governor Horner's private office and wouldn't leave.

The Governor vacated while his assistants used poles and ladders in a futile attempt to shoo the bird out.

Bulkley Urges Reorganization Bill's Revival

Sees a 'Definite Need'
Burke Asks 'Be Specific'
Would Limit Authority

By the Associated Press.

Senator Bulkley (Democrat), of Ohio, raised the touchy question of Government reorganization yesterday with a statement that Congress should consider such legislation again next session.

Meanwhile, Senator Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, asserted that if a measure similar to that which the House pigeonholed last year should be offered it "wouldn't even pass the Senate."

The discussion recalled a statement made by President Roosevelt last week that he had been canvassing the need for reorganization, in the interest of more efficient and businesslike government, with members of the committee which drew up his original proposals. He declined to say what his plans were, however.

Bulkley, an Administration supporter to the extent that Mr. Roosevelt backed him for renomination recently, voted for the reorganization bill last year, after voting also for an amendment offered by the bill's critics.

Last year's battle centered principally on a proposed broad delegation of authority to the President to make changes in the administrative setup. Bulkley supported an amendment to give Congress a veto power over the President's changes. He voted, also, to send the bill back to committee for revision.

Yesterday he said that, in his opinion, the departments of the executive branch of the Government "definitely need" reorganization.

"I have not changed my mind," he added. "I voted for recommittal and for final passage of the bill. I also supported the Wheeler amendment because I believe the President ought not to have final say on questions of reorganization.

"I think such a measure ought to be considered this session and we should safeguard it to see that Congress has the final say on matters of reorganization."

Burke pointed out that six Democratic Senators who voted for the bill last year were no longer members of the Senate. Other Senators "who have gone home have found out what the people really think about the bill and some of them are not likely to vote for it," he said.

He suggested that the President should ask Congress for specific changes in the governmental structure.

Storm Havoc Grows

Heavy enrollment in Government departments along with 100 per cent returns in several private business firms yesterday boosted new memberships in the Red Cross to 16,091, a jump of 3,778 for the day.

Of the total, 2,607 came from Government departments and 174 from the new downtown booths. Business firms reporting 100 per cent membership were J. C. Weedon Real Estate Co.; the Lanman Engraving Co. and the Dupont Circle Liquor Store.

State Revenues Cut

Meanwhile James L. Fieser, vice chairman of the Red Cross, reported new flood rehabilitation problems he discovered during a nine-day survey of the hurricane area in New England.

Loss of maple trees in Vermont, destruction of tobacco crops and barns through Connecticut, and heavy loss of timber in New Hampshire would cut revenue in all these States, Fieser said.

Faced with approaching winter, the Red Cross is rushing home repairs, aid to fishermen, and to others whose means of making a living were swept away by hurricane and flood. Fieser declared in 25 years of disaster experience he had not witnessed such thorough destruction of homes and public works as he found in New England. He estimated 20,000 families would need Red Cross help.

Relief Funds $470,465

Emergency funds for the relief of New England totaled $470,465 yesterday, officials announced. Several hundred persons were reported to have registered for Red Cross help in Charleston, S. C., where a tornado struck last week.

John Saul, president of the B. F. Saul Co. and general chairman for former roll calls, last night outlined administrative expenses of the Red Cross organization in a broadcast over Station WRC.

Two radio programs over WMAL today will be devoted to the current roll call. Lee Everett will preside at the broadcast from the Peoples Drug Store at Eleventh and G streets northwest at 7:30 a. m. L. E. Rubel, president of Underwood and Underwood and chairman of roll call publicity last year, will speak at 6:40 p. m.

Nazi Invaders Capture 500 Czech Soldiers

By Roy Porter,

Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

(AP).—A German schutzstaffel advance guard surrounded an estimated 500 Czechoslovak soldiers here today, threatened them with machine guns and seized their arms and automobiles.

The advance guard moved in six hours before the time agreed upon by the international military commission regulating occupation of the western Sudeten zone, Czechoslovaks declared.

The black-uniformed elite guardsmen released their prisoners after a direct protest from Czechoslovak military authorities.

An official protest will be made both to Berlin and the international commission.

Police Win Dime On Pinball Device; Proprietor Held

Benjamin Golovin, 50, of 1332 Fifteenth street northwest, was charged with setting up a gaming table after he allegedly paid a policeman 10 cents for making a certain score on a pin ball machine.

Detectives Samuel Smith and Oliver Coffin, of the vice squad, arrested Golovin in a restaurant in the 1000 block Vermont avenue northwest.

Taxi Surety Firm Seeks Injunction Against D. C. Ban

The taxicab liability insurance law passed in the closing days of the last Congress has hit its first legal snag, it was revealed yesterday.

J. Balch Moor, superintendent of insurance, called in District legal advisers yesterday in his fight with a local mutual insurance company he claims violated the regulations.

Moor said the company, which has written policies for more than 800 taxicabs, including three large fleets, did not comply with the regulations controlling expenditure of premium money. It was stated the company has been paying commissions to its agents for selling insurance policies to cab drivers to an extent that is against the regulations.

Recently when Moor asked to inspect the company's books, and was refused, the company attorney, Jeff Lichtenberg, reported Moor threatened to take away its license.

Yesterday the attorney said: "Moor is trying to tell us how to do business."

Lichtenberg obtained a temporary restraining order September 24 to prevent the District from interferring "in the business of the company." The attorney said he wanted to prevent the District from withdrawing certification from the Public Utilities Commission, which is required under the regulations.

The motion on the restraining order is to be argued this morning in District Court.

The firm, Hutchins Mutual Insurance Co., has operated in the District a number of years writing marine insurance.

U. S. Urges Peace Be Kept By Justice

Welles in Broadcast Asks Arms Reduction Would Limit Air Raids

staved off war.

Speaking over a National Broadcasting Company's network, the Undersecretary said also that President Roosevelt's special appeal to Premier Mussolini of Italy to help prevent armed conflict had become known to the Italian government before Mussolini's conversation with Hitler that preceded the Munich conference call.

Declaring that in the last week "modern civilization passed through the valley of the shadow of death," he recounted the steps taken by the United States to prevent the disaster. He recalled the notes, appealing for peace, sent to the President of Czechoslovakia, the Chancellor of Germany, the Prime Ministers of Britain and France and to the Polish and Hungarian governments. Then urgent notes were sent to this country's envoys throughout the world, to marshal the forces of the governments to which they were accredited, in the interest of averting war. All the nations appealed to expressed their appreciation and many sent similar notes to the governments involved, he said.

A New Opportunity

"Today," Welles said, "perhaps more than at any time during the past two decades, there is presented the opportunity for the establishment . . . of a new world order based upon justice and upon law. . . .

"And permanent peace can come only from a rededication of themselves by the nations to these tenets in their relationships:

"The observance of the sanctity of the pledged word; nonintervention in the internal affairs of other countries; the settlement of disputes and the revision of treaties whenever necessary by peaceful negotiation and in a spirit of equity rather than by resort to the use of force or to the threat of force; and respect by all nations for the just rights of others in the same measure in which they expect their own just rights to be observed."

He included the Far East as well as Europe in the places where "tragic controversies still fester" and said that if, on such a basis as he had outlined, there should be brought about a solution, "the agony of spirit which countless men and women have suffered these past few days will not have been in vain."

Sympathizes With Czechs

"Only in such a way," he continued, "can the nations of the world be enabled to move forward toward the determination of the two great underlying needs of today, the solution of which becomes daily more necessary—the limitation and reduction of armaments, together with a world-wide agreement to cease for all time attacks on civilian populations by air-bombing and by gas, and that economic reconstruction without which there can be neither international stability nor well-being."

He expressed sympathy "with the distress and suffering" of those who, under the settlement, "are forced to leave their homes and seek their fortunes in alien surroundings and under new auspices."

But he added that "upon the merits of the decisions reached in Munich, to use the President's words, we do not need, nor do we intend to pass.

"Every man and woman in the United States, however, shares in the universal feeling of relief that war has been averted. Can anyone doubt that the cry for peace, not only on the part of the people of this country but on the part of peoples throughout the world during these past days has been an impelling factor in the preventing of the conflict?"

private secretary to Robert Lansing, Wilson's Secretary of State.

Born in Denver, Colo., Crane was the son of Charles R. Crane, whom Wilson appointed American Minister to China in 1920. The younger Crane was graduated from Harvard in 1904, and five years later married Ellen Douglas Bruce, of Berry Hill Plantation, Halifax County, Va. They had one daughter, Mrs. Frederick S. Fisher, jr. Crane entered the Crane Co., of Chicago, in 1904, and eventually became vice president.

Active in Public Affairs

Long active in public affairs, Crane was elected a member of the Chicago Rivers and Harbors Commission in 1909. From 1913 to 1915 he was a member of the Public Safety Commission of Chicago and Cook County, Ill. He was a commissioner of the Virginia Commission on Game and Inland Fisheries.

Crane was a fellow of the American Geographical Society, a member of the Institute of World Affairs and of the Council of Foreign Relations. A music lover, he was president of the Virginia State Choral Festival in 1931.

He was a member of the Metropolitan, Chevy Chase and Burning Tree clubs of Washington, in addition to clubs in New York, Richmond, Virginia Beach and Hampton.

them," he confessed, "but they stuck in my throat."

Concluding a memorable speech, with his beautiful wife, Lady Diana Manners Cooper, looking on from the gallery, the spunky little statesman said:

"I have given up an office I loved and perhaps ruined my political career, but that is a little matter.

"I have retained something which is to me of great value. I can still walk about the world with my head erect."

Debate to Continue

The debate which opened today should run three or four days. If the 615 members of Parliament were free to vote according to their private conviction, the result might be the downfall of the Chamberlain government, since the Munich peace is unacceptable, not only to the Laborites and Liberals, as might be anticipated, but also to a large minority of government supporters, headed by Eden, Cooper, Winston Churchill, Harold Nicolson and Leopold Amery.

[The House recessed at 11:10 p. m., until tomorrow, the Associated Press said.

[A government motion was placed on the table late tonight declaring "that this House approves the policy of His Majesty's government, by which war was averted in the recent crisis and supports their efforts to securing lasting peace."

[The motion will be moved on Wednesday, when the debate ends. It was signed by Chamberlain, Sir John Simon, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Malcolm MacDonald, minister of colonies.—Editor's note.]

Chamberlain was uneasy and unimpressive in his hour's justification of the Munich peace. There was little fire or snap to his words—he was on the defensive and he knew it.

Today's session of Parliament was a great contrast to the dramatic session last Wednesday. Then both sides of the House of Commons were melancholy and resigned to the thought of war with Germany. That session ended with Chamberlain's surprise announcement he was going to Munich to talk peace with Hitler, Mussolini and Daladier.

Today only the Conservatives, and not all of them, were melancholy. The rest of the M. P. S. were fighting mad—against Chamberlain more than Hitler. They were glad Chamberlain had brought back peace from Munich, but they felt he had paid too high a price and had injured national prestige and honor. They wanted to know why Chamberlain had not managed to make a better deal for the Czechs in particular and for the democracies in general.

Critics Cry "Shame!"

Chamberlain engaged in detailed comparisons to prove the Munich peace was closer to the original Berchtesgaden terms than to the stiffer terms of Godesberg. Opposition members were unconvinced and indulged in mocking laughter and shouts of "Shame!" The prime minister admitted Czechoslovakia had been compelled to release German political prisoners, but he had no answer when asked why Germany was not releasing Czech prisoners and hostages.

"What about the kidnaped Czechs?" queried red-headed Ellen Wilkinson. The prime minister pretended not to hear, although she redoubted Chamberlain had achieved "peace in our time," as he claimed upon returning from Munich. peated it four times. Finally, the speaker intervened to restore order.

When Chamberlain remarked that relief at the prevention of war had been mingled in this country with profound sympathy for the Czechs, his hecklers shouted: "It's an insult to say it," and "shame on you."

The prime minister straightened up from his notes and retorted warmly:

"I have nothing to be ashamed of."

Pointing an accusing forefinger at the labor benches, he added: "Those who have may hang their heads."

Referring to the Czech request for a loan, Chamberlain observed that apparently Britain was the only nation approached. He did not say so, but some of his hearers assumed he would not be averse to having France and possibly Russia and the United States help in underwriting the loan.

Britain was advancing £10,000,000 immediately, he said, in line with the old proverb, which he quoted as: "He who gets quickly gets twice."

Here the opposition voices interrupted to say the correct word was "gives" not "gets." This was too much for Chamberlain, who was alleged, when departing for Munich, to have misquoted slightly Shakespeare's character "Hotspur."

Mentions Roosevelt

Hurt at the implications on his knowledge of Shakespeare and proverbs, the prime minister wearily held up a hand and appealed for silence.

Modestly he had disclaimed that the Munich peace was a "personal or national triumph for anybody." Then he proceeded to set up a strange gallery of peacemakers—Hitler, Mussolini, Daladier and President Roosevelt.

"Harsh things have been said about the German chancellor," Chamberlain said, "but I do feel that the House ought to recognize the difficulties for a man in that position to take back such emphatic declarations as he had already made amid the enthusiasm ——" The rest of the prime minister's lame apology for the Fuehrer's ultimatum was drowned in opposition mirth and ridicule.

As for Mussolini and his son-in-law, Count Galeazzo Ciano, Chamberlain said, "Europe and the world have reason to be grateful to the heads of the Italian government in contributing to a peaceful solution."

After praising Daladier for his courage and good humor, Chamberlain went on: "There is one other power which was not represented at the Munich conference——"

"Czechoslovakia," interjected the opposition.

Chamberlain continued, blandly, "but which, nevertheless, we felt to be exercising constantly increasing influence. I refer, of course, to the United States of America.

"Those messages of President Roosevelt, so firmly and yet so persuasively phrased, showed how the voice of the most powerful nation in the world could make itself heard across 3,000 miles of ocean to sway the minds of men in Europe."

Now that the Czechoslovakian problem had been solved to Chamberlain's satisfaction, he said it might be possible to "make further progress along the road to sanity."

"Carve up a few more countries," suggested the Labor voices.

Chamberlain defended the Anglo-German friendship pact which he and Hitler signed in Munich as "something more than a pious expression of opinion." Chamberlain thinks Hitler will keep his word, just as he thinks the same of Mussolini. That is the fundamental point of difference between Chamberlain and his critics, including Eden and Cooper.

The prime minister concluded with an intimation that as soon as he can complete his present tasks he would hand over his office to a younger man. Both sides applauded this prospect.

By far the best speech of the day, in intellectual and emotional content, was Duff Cooper's farewell to $5,000 a year and free housing at the admiralty. He spoke from the aisle seat which had belonged to the prime minister's famous half-brother, the late Sir Austen Chamberlain. To Cooper's right was Anthony Eden; in front of him Lady Astor and Winston Churchill, and only 15 feet away sat the prime minister himself.

Galleries Crowded

Never had the commons been more crowded, the American, Italian and Russian and Belgian ambassadors were in the diplomats' gallery. The Duke of Kent, who is beginning to educate himself in international affairs at first hand, sat behind the clock—the position traditionally reserved for the Prince of Wales, when there is one. The Duke of Norfolk also was present.

As the former admiralty chief fired broadsides into British foreign policy, the prime minister slumped forward in his seat, his feet hoisted against the polished dispatch box that ornaments the speakers' table. Occasionally Chamberlain thrust up his head in proud defiance. Cooper was liberally applauded by the opposition—he was their darling today, although some of them once had rated him an "irritable pipsqueak."

The great defect in British foreign policy, said Duff Cooper, was that it had drifted day by day nearer to war with Germany, without ever making it absolutely clear to Hitler that Britain was prepared to fight.

As Duff Cooper sat down beside Eden, the latter bowed his head in sympathy and wiped his eyes. The opposition applauded and the government benches were uncomfortably silent.

Eden, breaking a silence of months in Parliament, arranged himself alongside Cooper, although he dealt out a modicum of praise to Chamberlain as well as a big dose of criticism.

"War has been averted and the world is immeasurably grateful," said Eden, "but let it be remembered that war has been averted not at our expense or of that of any other great power, but at the cost of grave injustice to a small and friendly nation."

Richard Law, conservative son of the late conservative prime minister, Andrew Bonar Law, ten terms Hitler laid down to Chamberlain at Berchtesgaden.

Cooper told how he had tried to persuade himself that the Munich terms were good enough for him. "I tried to swallow

Henlein Rides With Him

The populace raised deafening cheers for the soldiers, but these were dwarfed as the Fuehrer himself arrived in an open car, accompanied by Konrad Henlein, Sudeten German Party leader and now Germany's commissioner for Sudetenland.

The procession moved over crowd-lined streets and roads 17 miles from Wildenau to Eger, through Haslau, Asch and Franzensbad, Hitler standing in the front of a big open automobile preceded by two armored cars and followed by his long retinue.

Myriads of Nazi banners and other decorations were brought out for the occasion. All along the road at regular intervals were banners reading, "Thanks to our deliverer!"

Speaks for Six Minutes

The Reichsfuehrer looked straight ahead, unsmiling, his hand outstretched in Nazi salute to acknowledge the cheers. He drove directly to the market place of Eger and mounted a large tribune which had been erected overnight.

He addressed the crowd for six minutes and said:

"Egerlanders!

"Today I may for the first time greet you as my Egerlanders! Through me the entire German people greets you. At this moment it greets not only you, but the entire Sudeten Germany, which in a few days will belong entirely to the German Reich.

"This greeting is, however, at the same time a pledge:

"Never again will this land be torn away from the Reich.

"Over the German, the greater German Reich lie the sheltering German shield and the protecting German sword.

"You, yourselves, are part of this protection, and from now on will have to do your part like all other Germans.

"However, it is a matter of pride for all of us that every German district takes part not only in German joy but also in all the beauties and, if necessary, in all our sacrifices.

"For you, the nation was ready and she unsheathed her sword for you. You will be exactly as ready to do your part if ever, anywhere else, German soil and German people should be in danger.

All Must Stand as One

"From now on the German people will shape its future in this community of destiny and will, and no power on earth will be able ever again to threaten this future and so today the German people stands as a compact unit from north to south, from east to west, and all are ready to stand up one for the other and never to forsake one another.

"Germany, however, is happy over these days which you are not experiencing alone—the entire German nation feels with you and is happy with you. Your happiness is the happiness of 75,000,000 in the Reich as it was hitherto, just as your sorrow until several days ago was the sorrow of all.

"And so we now begin our march into the great German future, and we want in this hour to thank the Almighty that He blessed us on our path in the past and we want to ask Him that in the future also He may lead our way to a bounteous Germany. Sieg Heil."

After speaking at Eger, Hitler went on to complete his day's tour of the new territory.

He rode through farming villages to Schoenbach, where he crossed the frontier into Saxony. Here, as on the first part of the tour, he was greeted as a "liberator." He rode under triumphal arches erected for him in almost every village.

An estimated 20,000 German troops were in Zone Three tonight, and the occupation of this region is to go on gradually for two more days.

"I'm so grateful for what Siler City School taught me about COLDS"

Says Mrs. J. B. WHITLEY

"Every winter Margaret used to come down with one cold after another," Mrs. Whitley says. "Then the clinic started at her school. Soon she was catching fewer colds, and getting over them quicker. It certainly opened my eyes. Since then our whole family has followed Vicks Plan—and colds don't worry us now like they used to."

17,353 VOLUNTEERS
Take Part In Great Colds-Clinic

Over 7,000 School Children Do Their Part

DURING four winter periods, a modern crusade against colds was waged in schools, factories, homes. Here's what happened:

Both the number and length of colds were drastically reduced . . . Sickness from colds was cut more than half (50.88%) . . . School absences due to colds were reduced even more (57.86%)!

These are actual figures—the average results of the four winter series of clinical tests in which 17,353 people (including 7,031 school children) took part. Thirty-seven doctors were on the supervisory staff. Over 500 teachers, nurses, and other trained workers assisted them.

A SIMPLE GUIDE. This great clinic proved the worth of Vicks Plan. Vicks Plan is a simple guide which emphasizes the importance of proper personal care and the use of two specialized medications—Vicks Va-tro-nol and Vicks VapoRub—for relief of symptoms in different types and stages of colds.

When colds threatened—at the first nasal irritation, sniffle, or sneeze—Va-tro-nol was used to help prevent the development of many colds. When a cold got by all precautions, its discomforts were relieved with VapoRub.

The results speak for themselves. Vicks Plan may do less for you—or it may do even more. But with such a record it certainly is worth a trial. It is simple and easy to follow in any home. You get the full directions in each package of Va-tro-nol or VapoRub.

Helps PREVENT COLDS

Va-tro-nol is specialized medication—expressly designed for the nose and upper throat, where most colds start. You feel this tingling, stimulating medication go right to work. Used at the first sniffle or sneeze—a few drops up each nostril—it helps to prevent many colds from developing. Keep it handy and use it early.

VICKS VA-TRO-NOL

RELIEVES misery of COLDS

VapoRub is a family standby for relieving misery of colds. Rubbed on throat, chest, and back, VapoRub acts two ways at once: (1) Direct through the skin like a poultice; (2) Direct on irritated air-passages with its medicated vapors. This double action loosens phlegm, clears air-passages, eases cough, relieves local congestion.

Italy Demands Satisfaction Of Hungary's Claims at Once

Warns Delay May Cause 'New Complications'
Fascist Press Sees Europe Still Far From Peace
British Envoy Confers on Spanish Volunteers

By the Associated Press.

Rome, Oct. 3.—Italy called today for speedy completion of Czechoslovakia's partition by satisfaction of Hungary's minority claims.

The semiofficial Informazione Diplomatica information service cautioned that delay in settling this problem might bring on "new complications."

The sharp tone of the Fascist press, meanwhile, plainly reflected the Italian conviction Europe was still far from an assured peace.

The Spanish civil war, hostility to Italy in some French quarters and Soviet Russian influence in Europe all were cited as potential trouble breeders.

The Earl of Perth, British Ambassador to Rome, and Foreign Minister Count Galeazzo Ciano held a 30-minute conference at which diplomats believed they dealt with the prospects for expediting enforcement of the Anglo-Italian Treaty of last April 16.

This pact has been inoperative because it was conditioned upon withdrawal of Italian volunteers from Spain.

The authoritative Fascist editor, Virginio Gayda, complaining of the unfriendly tone on the part of the French press toward Italy, said the Fascist nation was "ready for war" and would "fight even against France" if necessary.

The newspaper La Tribuna said it was "a long step" from having averted war to "realizing all the conditions for general disarmament."

"Who can say that there are not in Europe other war flames to extinguish and other instances of injustices to rectify?" La Tribuna demanded.

The newspaper said there could be no pacification in Europe "until the Muscovite influence has been finally eliminated."

In the existing situation, it added, instead of disarming "it is necessary to arm ourselves better to be ready for any event."

The Vacant Chair

With the Supreme Court once more in session, interest naturally centers upon the chair left vacant by the death last July of Justice Cardozo. Even without Chief Justice Hughes' appropriate eulogy of the great liberal jurist, his absence would have been keenly felt yesterday as the black-robed justices took their places on the bench.

A considerable number of vital cases awaiting action before the court emphasize the importance of filling this vacancy by appointment of a jurist of no less distinction than Justice Cardozo. The constitutionality of the Tennessee Valley Authority is under question. A number of cases growing out of the National Labor Relations Act involve basic questions of constitutional rights. Selection of a mere politician, a crusader of any sort or a mediocre judge to this post of great responsibility would be a source of disappointment and regret throughout the land.

It is scarcely to be anticipated that an appointment will be made at present. Since Justice Cardozo died after the adjournment of Congress, the President could make a recess appointment. But few, if any, jurists of distinction would care to ascend the Supreme Bench in advance of their confirmation by the Senate. Consequently, nothing would be gained by filling the vacancy before the new Congress assembles in January.

The objective to be sought is not an emergency appointment that might embarrass the nominee, but the most careful sifting of candidates during the next three months, if that has not already been done. Only a jurist of the highest qualification selected for his judicial temperament and understanding of the law can properly occupy the position vacated by Justice Cardozo.

Blunderbuss Law

In the closing days of the last session Congress approved, and the President signed, a bill requiring registration of all persons in this country, citizens and aliens alike, who are acting as agents of foreign principals.

The measure is going to prove a perfect example of that blunderbuss legislation always likely to do far more harm than good. The purpose was to throw the spotlight of publicity on those engaged in disseminating foreign propaganda in the United States behind the cloak of secrecy. The actual result of the law, however, will be to place in a highly invidious position a great many individuals engaged in perfectly legitimate business activities.

This arises from the fact that the act requires the registration not only of persons serving as public relations counsel and publicity agents but also, with some exceptions, of all who are acting as "agent, servant, representative or attorney for a foreign principal or for any domestic organization subsidized directly or indirectly in whole or in part by a foreign principal."

No doubt this broad coverage was designed to identify propagandists. What it actually does, however, is to compel registration with the Department of State of hundreds of individuals who are not engaged in any propagandist activity whatsoever. Moreover, those registered are compelled to give full details regarding their contracts and salaries to be open to any snooper.

In the carefully-worked out regulations issued by the Department of State, many of the worst abuses possible under this act have been circumvented. But the department's discretionary authority with respect to the interpretation and the application of the law is very limited. The result is that while few propagandists are likely to be identified as such, many totally innocent individuals are going to be liable to the law's penalties simply because they do not realize that the measure applies to them.

In that category are lawyers engaged in legal activity on behalf of embassies and legations, advertising men serving foreign railroads and tourist agencies, agents for foreign shipping firms and so on. These and others have been warned that they must register by October 6 or face a possible fine of $1,000, or imprisonment for two years, or both.

It is obvious, therefore, that if a gross injustice is not to be done to many citizens, the law will have to be revised or scrapped altogether when Congress reconvenes. In the meantime the individuals affected have no alternative but to register. They are the victims of a not uncommon legislative failing—good intentions embodied in foolish law.

Chamberlain's Report

At the hour when Adolf Hitler was yesterday making his triumphant entry into the ceded Sudeten territory, Neville Chamberlain, in London, was facing an ordeal far more difficult than any most men are ever called upon to undergo.

In accordance with the principles of democracy, with which Hitler need not bother, the British Prime Minister had to report on the Munich agreement to the representatives of the British electorate. And he had not merely to report on, but to justify, this fait accompli, knowing that resignation is his only recourse if he is unable to secure a vote of confidence from Parliament. Today, before the French Chamber of Deputies, Premier Daladier will confront an identical situation.

The task for Neville Chamberlain was the more difficult because, by countenancing a policy of conciliation with a nation seeking forceful domination in Europe, he has shattered a fundamental tradition of his own political party. This was demonstrated as far back as last February when Anthony Eden resigned office as Foreign Secretary. It is emphasized again by the current resignation of Albert Duff Cooper, First Lord of the Admiralty, who openly states that he "profoundly distrusts the foreign policy" developed by Mr. Chamberlain. To the anticipated condemnation of the Labor and Liberal opposition is added this cleavage in the Prime Minister's own party.

Finally there is the fact that Chamberlain's position before Parliament was inevitably purely defensive. His greatest asset—that he successfully averted a war—becomes of progressively less value as last month's crisis fades into history. But the immediate fruits of the Munich agreement—the annexation of Czech territory and the tragic plight of the refugees in that country—loom daily larger. M. Daladier today will be in the same unenviable position, indeed the more so because his government at Munich deserted the French alliance with Czechoslovakia.

In the face of these adverse circumstances Mr. Chamberlain yesterday handled his task well. He showed, in the first place, that the concessions secured from Hitler at Munich were by no means inconsiderable. Incidentally, this viewpoint was given pathetic confirmation here in Washington yesterday by the Czech Minister to the United States. Said Mr. Hurban, in courageous contradiction of those now prophesying the inevitable demise of Czechoslovakia as an independent political unit, "It depends upon us now whether we survive or whether the blow will prove fatal."

In the second place, Mr. Chamberlain demonstrated, briefly but clearly, that the situation into which Europe had been drifting for months prior to the Czech crisis was perfectly hopeless. The League system had broken down; the peace treaties were disintegrating; collective security had lately ceased to be even a talking point. The alternatives were a war of which no man could see the outcome, or else some such direct contact between the four great powers of western Europe as took place on the British Prime Minister's personal initiative.

It is, of course, permissible for Americans to blame the British and French premiers for choosing concessions—at the expense of Czechoslovakia—to war. But for the most part those who recognize how strong would be our reluctance to join the Anglo-French combine will here be keenly conscious of the mote in our own eye. There are not many who really believe that we can simultaneously enjoy the benefits of isolation and the freedom to criticize which is a concomitant of co-operation.

So, as Mr. Chamberlain says, the merit of the Munich agreement is its demonstration that "the representatives of four great powers can find it possible to agree on a way of carrying out a difficult and delicate operation by discussion instead of by loss of life." This may or may not have long-range constructive results. While guardedly optimistic, the British Prime Minister was yesterday very careful not to overstate the case. "Everything," as he says, "depends upon there being sincerity and goodwill on both sides." And Chamberlain's belief that there is sincerity on the German side remains as yet, in the larger issues, without any confirmation.

What Neville Chamberlain has done, in other words, is to take a chance on the essential decency of the German and Italian people at a moment when the only alternative to taking that chance was to precipitate a war "more stark and terrible than had ever taken place before." History may show that both he and Daladier thereby committed a disastrous blunder. It may also show that, as Mr. Chamberlain believes, a basis of real peace has been substituted for the progressive anarchy of recent years. Time will tell. And only the very bold, the very ignorant, or the very emotional will at this moment assume to be positive as to either outcome.

One further point made by Mr. Chamberlain is particularly worthy of attention in this country. It was not his pleasant reference to the valuable and "persuasive" eleventh-hour messages of President Roosevelt. It was not merely the definition of the United States, by a British Conservative statesman, as "the most powerful nation in the world." It was an observation at a later point in his speech, at first glance unconnected with his references to America.

The great lesson to be learned from this crisis, said Mr. Chamberlain, is that "peace is not to be obtained by sitting still and waiting for it to come."

There is a painfully accurate, if unintentional, definition of the precise attitude which many Americans have up to the present sought to regard as rational. And if this "most powerful nation" has been shaken out of its fatuous complacency with respect to its inescapable responsibilities for peace, then the sacrifice of Czechoslovakia, as measured by history, will not have been in vain.

New Work For Engineers

In many different lines of activity there is today evidence of a reaction against too severely specialized training. It is directed in some cases against physicians who have carried specialization to the point where the life of a patient may be endangered because of their ignorance of pathological manifestations outside their narrow field of interest. It also underlies criticism of economists who delight in narrow generalizations, devoid of practical significance in a present-day society where politics cannot be divorced from economics.

Even the trained engineer is now under fire. Dr. Thorndike Saville, dean of the New York College of Engineering, calls attention to the need for a new kind of administrative engineering service in many of the recently established Federal and municipal agencies. He mentions housing, flood control, power development and soil conservation as examples of the problems with which these new agencies deal. Such organizations undoubtedly require the services of expert engineers with first-rate technical training. But they also need men who are acquainted with the social problems underlying many of the physical improvements undertaken by modern government.

Consequently Dr. Saville concludes that it would be desirable to expand the engineering curriculum to include courses in economics, labor and social problems, finance and administrative practice. The principle behind his suggestion is logical, even though this specific proposal raises certain doubts. Just as specialization may be carried too far, so may diversification proceed to the point of impairing the rigorously scientific character of engineering schools.

It may be that two kinds of engineers are required on many of our public projects—one group trained for purely technical work and another for what Dr. Saville calls administrative services. Highly specialized skill is needed for the actual work of planning and construction. Even more important, however, is the service of men with sufficient diversified training to give the experts intelligent advice about how to achieve the social and economic objectives of the projects they are developing.

American Solidarity

It is not yet clear precisely what part, if any, the President's peace appeals of last week played in the events leading up to the four-power parley and the ensuing agreement regarding Czechoslovakia which removed the threat of imminent war in Europe. Moreover, in view of the possibility that the dove of peace hatched at Munich may turn out to be a vulture, the Administration is wise in refraining from taking any credit for the settlement.

However, there is no gainsaying the fact that the President's moral intervention in the European crisis did produce one unquestionably beneficial result. It gave voice to and helped consolidate the will to peace that exists in this hemisphere. Following Mr. Roosevelt's example and in the same spirit, the presidents of no fewer than 11 other American republics sent messages to the heads of government in Germany and Czechoslovakia. At the same time the chief executives of Argentina, Brazil, Peru, Cuba, Uruguay, Colombia, Haiti, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Costa Rica, the Dominican Republic, Honduras, Bolivia, Venezuela, El Salvador and Ecuador in messages to Mr. Roosevelt expressed the wholehearted support and approval of the people and governments of those countries for the President's efforts in behalf of peace.

In a few months at Lima, Peru, the American republics are to meet in another Pan-American conference. The problem of how to insure peace in the New World will again be considered at that time. In view of last week's manifestation of American solidarity arising in response to President Roosevelt's leadership, Lima should prove an even more important milestone on the road to lasting inter-American co-operation for peace than was Buenos Aires.

Letters to the Editor

A Bad Loser

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Although it is pointedly none of my business I am caught up by the prevailing fashion and wish to voice appreciation of the courtesy inherent in Reichsfuehrer Hitler's reply to President Roosevelt's message.

I was impressed by its sincerity, but was made more than ever aware of the extent to which expediency may color one's views—even those of men as outstanding as the foregoing have proven themselves to be. But I am doubtless merely revealing my own limitations when I ask why people finding themselves unwelcome in a conquered area do not sell their real estate and reinvest where they are wanted.

Any child, not a moron, set down by its elders in the yard of a neighbor wherein the other children proved unfriendly, would pick up his personal belongings and go on back home. One has small regard for a person who lacks the good taste to leave where he finds that he is unwanted. And unless he does so, hasn't he only himself to blame if he finds things unpleasant?

It would appear Fuehrer Hitler has persuaded himself that the returning "children" should bring along the "yard" or at least, the front gate, and whatever on the pantry shelves has not been nailed down.

To be sure, the dispute relates to a conquered area, but his wire reads, ". . . It is not Germany who is to blame for the fact that there is any Sudeten problem . . ."

Decidedly not. Germany would have preferred to have conquered all of Europe—only, she didn't! (And is she a bad loser?!)

Tremolo Plus Suavity

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The world has been presented with a new formula, a formula which will take its place beside our own Mohawk Valley formula and the British commission formula as a patented, sure-fire prescription with a money-back guarantee.

You might name it the banquet formula or the tremolo-in-the-throat formula or the gas mask and parade formula, or, simply, and with a gesture toward its originator, the Chamberlain formula. But by whatever name, it will be easy to recognize its objective—the destruction of democracy; its by-products—the creation of Fascists and Communists.

And now, after naming its objective and by-product, we are forced to admit that there is nothing very original about it; secrecy, deceit, terrorism and the parade of violence, all the elements of its predecessors are there; Chamberlain's only contribution is the tremolo in the throat and a certain suavity which our Girdlers and Rands would not stoop to employ.

Marine Bolsheviks

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Many writers of letters to The Post use the nom de plume of "Ex-Marine," "Former Marine," or "U. S. Marine." I recognize the right of any boy or man who is serving or has served in the famed United States Marine Corps to use such a pen name. But it is my opinion that several pro-communist letters recently appearing in The Post and supposedly written by Marines or ex-Marines were written either by communists attempting window dressing, or by flat-hatted, flat-footed deck monkeys of the Navy trying to mislead the American public into believing that United States Marines or ex-Marines send pro-communism letters to The Post.

One of those, signing his Red letter "Former Marine," likens Mussolini to Al Capone; Hitler to Dutch Schultz; and tries to glorify the Red Ambassador, Litvinof, by comparing him to J. Edgar Hoover. And then goes on to say that just as sure as the boss of the "G-men sent Al Capone to Alcatraz, and Dutch Schultz to the morgue, so too will "G-man" Litvinof put an end to Hitler and Mussolini.

Former Marine's letter, like all communist propaganda, is full of distortion and lies. In the first place, Al Capone was sent to Alcatraz by the efforts of United States Treasury agents—and not J. Edgar Hoover's panicky law students. Secondly, Dutch Schultz was not a German. For no other reason than to keep the record straight I mention that he was an American of Jewish extraction and that on the operating table in Newark's city hospital he died as a Roman Catholic.

And lastly, the police of the city are still looking for the guys who shot the so-called Dutchman. Personally, I always was under the impression that Schultz was sent to his reward by bullets fired from guns in the hands of a couple of hoodlums from Paterson, N. J.

As for the brothers-under-the-skin, Hitler, Mussolini and Litvinof, fighting each other—here's hoping the bout ends in a triple knockout.

Expects Fresh Demands

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A large minority of the ablest statesmen in Europe are of the opinion that the Munich agreement was nothing but a postponement of an inevitable conflict of the major powers. They are convinced that the German Terror, fanatical and insatiable, will soon be making fresh demands incompatible with his present promises. Czechoslovakia was as surely sold down the river as blacks were in this country.

In America, likewise, there are numbers of well-informed persons who share the same views; who put no faith in Hitler or his accomplice in Rome. Those who imagine that terms of the settlement dictated by this precious pair will not be violated whenever it suits them (most likely inside a year) are victims of incurable naivete, but no more ingenuous than those others who rend the air with shouts of praise for Mr. Roosevelt's intervention; he and Mr. Hull averted another world war. Certainly these gentlemen deserve credit but actually they had no more to do with the imagined peace than the man in the moon. The twin bullies knew the United States would never again send men across the sea to fight—the madness of 1918 would never be repeated.

It is pleasant, though, to read the plaudits heaped on our dignitaries, and how enthusiastic some of the acclaimers are, especially here at the Capital. Is it possible that any who clap so vigorously have any axes to grind, any motive in their paens? Perish the thought.

Reader Reactions

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Every red-blooded American should rise up and cheer The Washington Post for its superb editorials and thought-provoking feature writers like Ernest Lindley, Westbrook Pegler and Dorothy Thompson. Miss Thompson's "The Novotny Kidnaping Case" is so good, the characterizations so apt, that I've clipped this column. I'm particularly partial to the letters to the editor, for they give the reaction of the readers. I never miss a one.

It's easy to give away something that doesn't belong to you. If Hitler had to be appeased why couldn't the British have restored Garmany's colonies instead of dismembering poor little Czechoslovakia?

Your editorials should be required reading in all current history courses. Keep the good work up. Of the three daily papers we receive The Washington Post is my favorite.

Defined As Atrocity

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I wish to thank Miss Dorothy Thompson for her splendid article "Peace—and the Crises Begins." To think that the so-called leaders of democracy in Europe failed to make provisions for the minorities in Czechoslovakia is almost unbelievable. What has happened to the Jews and non-Nazis in Germany and elsewhere where they have sown their poisoned philosophy is past history.

England's "Charlie McCarthy," who was on an errand of mercy, permitted this atrocity on a weak and defenseless people. Where these poor, helpless creatures were to go, and how to take their possessions was none of his business. His mission was peace and the plight of thousands of homeless and frightened humans Mr. Chamberlain did not consider to be in his line of duty. Only a Salome could muster the smile that Chamberlain showed to the English people.

The fact that for 20 years those people struggled to build up a Czechoslovakian democracy where due process of law is invoked—that was of no consequence. He wanted to show the world that brutal force and the crushing of minorities was the medium of getting peace

Significant Allegory

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To Dorothy Thompson, congratulations on "The Novotny Kidnaping Case." This is an allegory of no small significance, and highly complimentary to the distinguished writer: More power to her. And now that Hitler has what he wants, will he stay "put?" No, just until he wants something else: the trouble is that the treaty that closed the World War was not stringent enough. They should have been annihilated then.

Note the uprising in Chile. And they will do the same in our country if allowed. Why should other nations at peace with the world be always making concessions? If people of Germany do not concur with his ideas he (Hitler) lops off their head.

Christianity is becoming unknown in Germany under the Nazi regime where, in centuries gone by, it was of prime importance. Shame on such a leader as Hitler.

Democracy Dissolved

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Realism! And a breathing spell for more realism. Some call the Munich appeasement "Europe's New Deal."

This seems merely a shallow association of ideas—on account of the alphabetical mulligatawny: Adolf, Benito, Chamberlain, Daladier.

For this soup Hitler supplied the turmeric; Mussolini, garlic; Neville and Edouard suggest just a trace of beef and dumplings.

About Mr. Neibling

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have just read the article signed by one Carl A. Neibling, as president, German League of the United States. It appears that he is very disturbed because the Government has failed to strangle the press of the country. Evidently this German has never heard of the freedom of the press provided for in the First Amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America.

If he wants a controlled press it is suggested that he return to Germany, where he will surely find it, but not in the United States of America. Gott sei Dank.

Hollywood In The Ozarks

"JESSE JAMES wasn't really a bad man," they tell you in the Missouri Ozarks. "He never hurt the poor people. He'd steal money off of the rich people and then give it to the poor ones." His career of banditry is thus charitably explained: "His maw and his paw was both killed in the Civil War, and that kinda turned him agin things, and he tuck to bank robbin'."

Thus, Jessie James has become a sort of local Robin Hood, and legends concerning him abound among the hill people. That element in all of us which secretly delights in the successful and picturesque defiance of the forces of law and order finds ample food in the career of Jesse James. He was hidden and protected by the mountain people when pursuit grew too hot, and he never failed to leave behind him a substantial token of his gratitude.

The older members of a monastery in the Southwest tell with great glee of how Jesse James would occasionally come there to demand that shelter which the Holy Rule decreed for all who ask it. The monks would put him up for the time being, and there, safe from pursuit, Jesse James would regale his hosts with tales of his exploits. If the monks had been English instead of Latins, there might have risen up a Friar Tuck to accompany him on his forays. Who knows?

It is indicative of the helplessness of "the law" in the face of such popular encouragement and protection that Jesse James met his end, not through capture or surrender, but through black treachery. He was shot in the back by his "pardners" for the sake of the reward, as he was standing on a chair hanging a picture on the wall of his home. The betrayers, however, did not long enjoy their reward, for, according to local tradition, remorse over their deed drove them insane.

When the town of Pineville, in southwestern Missouri, was chosen as the setting for a film dealing with the life of Jesse James, the great bandit came to life again as the benefactor of his fellow hillsmen. Although, so far as is known, Jesse James did not frequent Pineville or its environs, the town itself, beyond the paving of the square by the WPA, has not changed in the memory of the oldest inhabitants and might serve as a model for all towns in the Southwest during the 70's and 80's.

Twentieth Century-Fox has paid the town the astronomical sum of $25,000 to film its picture there. Local inhabitants were signed up as extras long in advance and set to the congenial task of raising whiskers and letting their hair grow ragged. For the hypothetical loss in trade which he thus suffered, the village barber was given ample compensation.

The pavement of the public square has been covered with earth, and hitching racks and watering troughs have been installed on the Square. Planks replace the concrete sidewalks, and shingled marquis take the place of the modern awnings. In one corner of the Square the Dixie Belle Saloon and Hotel has been erected.

When the "movies" arrived, they found themselves among one of the most friendly groups of people in the country. The hill people, with their outstanding virtue of simplicity, straightforward honesty and democratic and easy, yet quaintly formal manners, welcomed them with great enthusiasm and showed a burning interest and zeal in the work. The older inhabitants were more valuable than any library in furnishing information on contemporary dress, manners and customs. The director expressed himself as amazed at the ease and ability with which the local extras went through with their parts.

Since the town of Pineville is too small to accommodate such a crowd, the "movies" took up residence in the neighboring resort village of Noel. There they embarked upon a life full of unsuspected occasions for good times. Noel now proudly acclaims itself "The Hollywood of the Ozarks." The two blocks of its main and only street are thronged with automobiles. Hot-dog stands and beer joints are doing a land-office business. Local urchins who are not acting in the picture have set themselves up as guides, with a line of ballyhoo that might profitably be studied by their more sophisticated brethren in the cities.

The dancing places of the resort are thronged every night by crowds eager to catch a glimpse of the "movies." The "movies" themselves dance among the common herd, pay court to the local beauties and fish and swim with great zest in the Ozark streams.

All this of course means a tremendous influx of money into the community. Proprietors of small snack stands are contemplating retiring for life on their profits. Inhabitants employed as extras simply gave up all attempt to raise a crop this year, a wise decision in light of the fact that farm products can rarely be sold for more than the cost of production.

More valuable than all this, however, has been the effect upon the lives of the people. Their monotonous days have been briefly lifted into a world of incredible glamour. They have met actors, directors, cameramen and, all the rest, and have found them to be lovable human beings like themselves, meeting them with a cordiality equal to their own.

This feeling of mutual good-will is shown by the insistence of the town on purchasing the Dixie Bell set from the company, and the company's plans for presenting the community with a sound-equipped theater.

'Nobody's Business'

SECRETARY of the Interior Harold Ickes entered the United States Naval Hospital in Washington on June 1, 1937. Secretary Ickes gets $15,000 a year plus the use of the customary limousine assigned to each Cabinet member. He is a man of considerable private wealth.

The newspaper announcement said that Mr. Ickes entered the Naval Hospital for examination for a stomach ailment and for a rest. He returned to his desk on July 6, but whether he spent the entire time from June 1 to July 6 in the Naval Hospital and just how much service and medicine he received is "nobody's business," in the judgment of Mr. Archibald Oden.

• • • •

YOU MAY BE forgiven for not knowing who Mr. Archibald Oden is. Mr. Oden is the secretary to the Secretary of the Navy and has taken it upon himself to decide what the taxpayers may know about the extent of their generosity to well-paid and independently wealthy politicians. He says it is "nobody's business," and so to hell with you, you back-stabbing Copperhead and Tory.

The charge for hospitalization is $3.75 a day at the Naval Hospital. It includes all normal hospital services and some that are not ordinarily included in the general service at private hospitals for a higher price. It includes not only board and room, but nursing and medical attention, most medicines and operations. A Cabinet member naturally would rate a private room, if one were available, but at worst he would have no more than one roommate.

IT NEED NOT be pointed out that $3.75 a day, or $26.25 a week, is a very small price for board and room alone in Washington.

A Washington citizen wrote a letter to the surgeon general of the United States Navy, asking by what authority Mr. Ickes, with his $15,000 a year, his private means and his complete innocence of naval status, was able to put himself away for treatment and "a rest" in the Naval Hospital. The surgeon general replied that the legislative appropriation act provided for the detail of a naval medical officer in attendance on the Congress.

"This legislation," he wrote, "has been construed to place on the medical department of the Navy the duty of treating Senators and Representatives, which treatment, on occasion, may require hospitalization."

• • • •

IF THE ACT merely provides that a naval medical officer be in attendance on the Congress, it obviously would be sheer fraud against the taxpayers to construe this to provide them with hospital service at $3.75 a day in an institution established for members of the naval service.

It is more obviously dishonest to construe so slender an act as authority for providing such service at this price for Cabinet members who are by no stretch of the imagination members of Congress.

Yet, by an extension of the law, this is the case. Mr. Ickes was not even required to get tatooed or to learn to say "Aye, aye, sir," instead of "Yes, yes, sir," in saluting his chief. He is not the only well-paid, non-service patient to receive valuable service from the Navy at a price which would not even rent a furnished room on the third floor and buy meals at the Greasy Spoon in the ordinary civilian life of Washington. However, it will be very difficult to obtain full information in view of the off-hand ruling of Mr. Oden, the secretary to the Secretary of the Navy, that all this is nobody's business.

THE MEDICAL profession often has been accused of operating on a plan similar to that of the late Robin Hood, overcharging the rich patients to pass the benefit along to those who are unable to pay anything. That is not a completely fair statement of the Robin Hood method.

True, the doctors do find it necessary to overcharge the rich, but the benefits are shared not only by those who are unable to pay anything, but also by those who come within the liberal interpretation of an act intended only to provide a young medical squirt to whip up hangover potions for the members of Congress.

Treasury Piles Up $700,000,000 Deficit Since July

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury announced yesterday it ran up a $700,000,000 deficit in the first quarter of the fiscal year which began July 1.

Under the emergency spending program approved by the last Congress it spent $2,210,165,385. Receipts, $1,509,182,032.55. In the similar three months last year, when expenditures amounted to $1,937,764,437, the deficit was only $287,073,673.

WPA, the principal gainer, spent $359,333,347 in the quarter, compared with $333,926,213 in comparable months last year.

As the Treasury borrowed money to finance the anticipated $4,000,000,000 deficit for the current year, the Federal debt rose to an all-time high of $38,407,012,443 on September 15.

Today And Tomorrow

After The War Panic

BEFORE ANYONE can begin to understand the consequences of the Munich peace, the world will have to recover its composure after the hysterical terror of the past month.

For the first time in the history of warfare the civil population felt itself to be in greater danger than the soldiers at the front; for the first time in the history of modern diplomacy the political leaders felt that they themselves might in a week or so be blown to bits.

• • • •

THE AMAZING events which took place between Mr. Chamberlain's journey to Berchtesgaden and his journey to Munich are explicable only as a race against the panic which was taking possession of Europe. The panic was greatest in England because after centuries of an invulnerable security the English people were the least prepared for and the least resigned to the horrors of actual invasion.

But after Nuremberg when the French mobilization became rapid, the panic spread to France, and from there the contagion took such hold in Italy that it had become doubtful whether Mussolini could have fulfilled the obligations of the Rome-Berlin axis. The panic had begun to invade Germany. Only the iron censorship, and the swift action which Hitler insisted upon, forestalled some kind of wild, despairing resistance to the threatened war.

Two weeks more of the fierce tension that existed in Europe after September 15, and the situation everywhere might well have become quite incalcuable.

• • • •

THE FIRST EXPLANATIONS of Mr. Chamberlain and the immediate comment of the British and French press must, therefore, be regarded as the exclamations of men who are dazed but immeasurably relieved at their escape from an overwhelming danger. They throw no light upon the future of Europe because what is being said now is a reaction to the danger of the immediate past and not a considered policy dealing with what is to come. A considered policy will not and cannot emerge from the wreckage of the whole existing system of public law, alliances, and systems of strategic defense until British and French public opinion recovers from the shellshock which it is now suffering.

For that reason the debates which will take place in the two Parliaments this week may be important. They may be important not because they will have the smallest effect upon immediate events but because they may mark the beginning of that re-education and re-adaptation to the new realities which shell-shocked nations, like individuals, must pass through.

The great question in these debates will be whether the British and French are healthy and vigorous enough to come quickly to a candid recognition of what has actually happened, or whether the shock has been so great that the truth is unbearable and a flight from reality is necessary. What the two democracies decide to believe about these events will determine whether they are able still to protect their nearest and most vital interests in the days to come or whether they are to go on through illusions to disaster.

THE IMMEDIATELY comforting but ultimately disastrous interpretation will be to say that in agreeing to the dismemberment, they have applied the principle of self-determination, that at Munich they substituted a negotiated settlement for one dictated by violence, that the rupture of the alliances makes Czechoslovakia another neutralized state like Switzerland, that the dismemberment of the Czechoslovak Republic corrects the injustices and the follies of the Versailles system, and that the reconstruction of Europe by four statesmen working under an expiring ultimatum is the foundation of a new and better international order.

It will be a great temptation to adopt this interpretation, and to derive from it the feeling that what has been done is not only a relief from terror but righteous as well. Yet such an interpretation will be only a refusal to look at disagreeable facts, and the practical consequences of such a flight from reality will be very serious. For if in a fervor of self-justification, the British and French peoples choose to believe that what they have accepted was not only necessary but good, they will begin again to disarm themselves physically and politically.

IN A EUROPE ruled by military forces they will again neglect their military defenses, and by doing that they will hasten the day when they will be confronted with claims that touch even more closely than did Czechoslovakia their vital interests and their national security. If they really believe, as Mr. Chamberlain on his return exclaimed with pardonable excitement, that they have already won peace in their own time, they will have done the one thing which makes it most unlikely that they will enjoy peace in their own time.

The alternative interpretation is to recognize frankly, humbly and bravely that they have yielded to the threat of force, and they must now live in a Europe in which no treaty, no law, and no engagement is better than the force which is ready to support it. They will not pretend that Czechoslovakia is dismembered in accordance with the principle of self-determination. For the population involved has had no chance, and will never have the chance, freely to express its will. They will recognize clearly that Hitler demanded for himself in the name of liberal principles that which he will immediately deny to them and their friends in the name of his own principles.

ONLY BY REMAINING undeceived can the British and the French hope eventually to judge realistically the new situation in which they find themselves, and the measures which they must take to protect themselves in the days to come. For Munich was not only the end of an epoch but the beginning of an epoch, and the new frontiers of Czechoslovakia are not the last stage but the first in a long and complicated reconstruction of the map of Europe and perhaps of the world.

What is to come of it no man living can today foresee. For no man can truly estimate now the imponderable and incalculable forces that have been unloosed within the ancient social structure of the European continent. But this much we can know, that momentous decisions will have to be taken rapidly and in a long series across the years, and that those who can exercise the most force coolly and without illusions will have, as they have had this month, the last word in deciding the issues.

More Views On Europe

Home-Coming

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The account of Mr. Chamberlain's home-coming, as described in the dispatch of your London correspondent printed in your issue of October 1, deeply stirred my Anglo-Saxon blood. Undoubtedly other Americans of the same racial descent experienced a similar thrill. The premier's peaceful message to his countrymen, "Go home and sleep quietly in your beds," has far-reaching implications, and these plain words contain the essence of his difficult mission.

After the nerve-racking episode through which Europe has just passed, in the face of great odds the crowning achievement of Neville Chamberlain is that Englishmen and most continental Europeans can still go about at their usual occupations. If, as he said, "The prelude to a larger settlement in which all Europe may find peace" is the future's vista, then indeed the world has good cause to rejoice.

I cannot omit a meed of thanks for your splendid handling, both in the news columns and editorially, of the recent crisis in foreign affairs. The Post has done public opinion a great service. FIDES.

Peewee Version

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We, too, have our Hitlerites. One of them at Hopeville, Ga., writing to The Post, would preserve our Americansim by "shooting the foreign writers and suspending the papers as guilty of treason who publish this propaganda"—meaning by "propaganda" the effort of the President and others to throw the moral influence of the United States on the side of world peace.

Donald Garrison evidently is still thrilling to the words of Candidate Gene Talmadge—his idea of a statesman and patriot. He would "make every American a real American or lock them up." It is not an original idea. The Klan tried it but didn't make it work, as the mass of Americans declined to accept the Klan's definition of Americanism.

It is important for all to recognize that we have plenty of inflammable political matter in our country, waiting to be touched off by another Huey Long. So The Post does a public service in publishing Mr. Garrison's peewee version of Mein Kampf. T. C. H.

The Pacifist Press

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Fraternite! Equalite! Stupidite! That should be the motto from now on for democracy! Mussolini is right when he says that democracy is headed by morons—too dumb for leadership.

Newspapers do not portray the opinion of America. Tell me not that they represent the temper of the man on the street. This latest crisis but serves to illustrate the truth of that assertion. For while the newspapers shrieked peace from their cloistered offices the people on the streets were talking war—taking deeper breaths and holding their shoulders up a little straighter. A full hundred have told me we shouldn't back down—that this whole mess should be cleaned up and straightened out and a stop put to the schemes of those who would dominate the world.

That kind of talk was almost unanimous. In all the 600,000,000 who go to make present day working democracy, only a Chamberlain and a Daladier could be found to do business with the Capone-Spitale combination of Hitler and Mussolini. Hitler's promises are the same as though written on sand—he is not interested in the Sudetens—he has never been, and still there are some so foolish as to believe him when he says that he is.

He is interested in the fortifications equal to a hundred Gibraltars that could not be left on his line of communications during his soon-to-come thrust to the east. He is interested in the minerals that are on their reverse slopes. He is interested in the Rumanian and Bulgarian oil and wheat fields, but above all else he is interested in the Dardanelles, which are now as they have forever been, a necessary possession of him who would rule the world. Austrian Recollections

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I was born in Austria, where I lived until after the World War. I was one of the 10,000,000 German-Austrians who ruled approximately 34,000,000 other people.

In 1917 when visiting my brother, who was stationed in a town called Leitmaritz (which is in the area of dispute), I was amazed to see a sign facing the railway station saying, "Germans buy of Germans," and the windows of many business houses displaying newspapers with "Czech deserting to the enemy" outlined with red pencil. On entering a cafe I noticed that only pictures of the German generals were displayed, and not one of the Austrian heroes.

I was then at an age to believe anything I was told. And the telling was always against the Czechs.

This experience made me stop and think and started me seeking the truth.

I felt then as now that they were as much entitled to liberation as the Poles, Rumanians, Hungarians, etc.

My second visit was after the war, when Czechoslovakia had been independent just two years. The hospitality I received there made me feel ashamed that I had ever thought them horrible people. I want to thank the Czechs for their kindness to me and other wanderers.

The so-called Sudetens and the Germans scattered over the world surely realize that through the influence of fantastic nationalistic agitators the Sudetens did not harmonize or co-operate with the Czech government and therefore hurt themselves. A people that have their own press, school system, representatives in Parliament, who can retain their belongings, have the right to work and earn a living, are far from oppressed. Czechoslovakia has Germans, Hungarians, Poles, Jews, etc., who are allowed to follow their own religion and all are tolerated, none suppressed.

They have all lived peacefully until a horde of leaders with animal instincts got together and established themselves in Germany and encircled the German people, keeping from them the truth and creating a problem never before heard of in the civilized world.

Dislikes Chamberlain

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: For shame on Chamberlain and Daladier "representing" England and France. All true liberty-loving people will remember Munich with disgust. The whole deal is clear in every detail was carefully planned with the full knowledge of Chamberlain and his tory cohorts.

Trenches were ordered dug in the heart of London to frighten the populace with the full knowledge of the perpetrators of this diabolical scheme that not a shell would burst anywhere in England. Then the dramatic call of Parliament followed by the Munich conference and the subsequent "selling out" of Czechoslovakia to the Nazi dictator. Having thoroughly aroused the fright of the English populace, Chamberlain returns to England acclaimed a hero and has the nerve to talk of "peace with honor."

Chamberlain and Hitler now eat from the same dish, have always done so in spirit. But what will be the reaction to Chamberlain of the liberty-loving masses of the English people when once this scheme is made known to them? G. F. M.

Washington, Oct. 2.

The Real Point

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: So many of your readers miss the real point of the Munich four-power conference that it is worth commenting on.

Stripped of verbiage, prejudice, political preferment, racial hatred, superficial nationalism, and everything under the sun except "who struck Billy Patterson," the Munich conference should have Easter bells in its wake instead of constipated and begrudging criticism.

Why? Because at Munich war was averted very definitely, and peace definitely asserted. Because at Munich the world learned for the first time that democracies have it within themselves to sit down at the same table with dictatorships and make final decisions.

Let some of the fradulent newspaper commentators, columnists, critics and pseudo historians examine these facts; and, having examined them, examine their own consciences. K. LORD HALSEY.

Washington, Oct. 1.

Peace Is Preserved

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The peace of Europe and, therefore, to a great extent the peace of the world has been preserved. The four-power conference just ended has accomplished this fact, but either due to anxiousness on Britain's or France's part to avert a general war or the outright lack of foresight the underlying causes are still with us.

I am inclined to believe that the former is true, for statesmen of the integrity and mental capacity of Chamberlain and Daladier are not ones to be fooled by false issues or cellophane treaties.

The outstanding consolation at this time, however, is that tranquility is once more restored even at the expense of bribing an international racketeer. Hitler is still with us and for any statesman even to attempt to prophesy the Chancellor's future policy as regards territorial designs would be tantamount to sticking out his neck.

Two men are predominantly responsible for this lull in international tension. Chamberlain, first, for his untiring effort and patience in bringing about and sustaining the requisite negotiations. Roosevelt, secondly, for his brilliant declarations of reason at a time when the world was staggering.

These declarations were timely and direct and, no doubt, did much toward finally settling the dispute, but the thing that impressed this correspondent most was the shrewdness demonstrated by the President in not allowing himself or the country to become involved in the trouble abroad.

When petitioned by Czechoslovakia relative to becoming a mediator in the crisis, the President made it plain the policy of the United States was to refrain from involvement in any foreign entanglements. He knew where to draw the line and made no hesitancy in doing so.

"If"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Because of the present war crisis it might be appropriate at the time to use the following quotation with a suitable cartoon of Uncle Sam remaining unperturbed but firm while the other countries are in chaos:

"If you can keep your head when all about you are losing theirs and . . ."

Court to Rule On 'Sit-Down'

By Mark Sullivan

The Fansteel Case

EARLY IN THE TERM of the Supreme Court that began Monday, the National Labor Relations Board is going to ask the court to review an important case.

It is the case of the Fansteel Metallurgical Corporation and C. I. O. The central point in the case is a sit-down strike.

The facts of the Fansteel case I take mainly from an official statement by NLRB. Where I use quotations, they are NLRB's language.

• • • •

IN THE PLANT of the Fansteel company at Chicago, a C. I. O. organizer started a union. Friction developed. On February 17, 1937, the leaders of the union "decided to take over and hold two of the company's buildings; these buildings were thereupon occupied by about 95 employes; work stopped; the remainder of the plant ceased operations."

The superintendent of the plant, accompanied by two police officials, went to the buildings and demanded that the sit-downers leave. They refused.

The Fansteel company went before an Illinois State court and asked for an injunction ordering the sit-downers to leave the buildings. The court issued the order. It was read to the sit-downers. They refused to obey; they remained in the buildings. Thereupon the court directed the sheriff to arrest the sit-downers and remove them.

• • • •

SEVEN DAYS LATER, "after a pitched battle, the strikers were ousted and placed under arrest." subsequently the sit-downers were tried in the State court for resisting the order of the court. Thirty-seven were convicted, fined and imprisoned for terms ranging from 10 to 180 days. The sit-downers made no appeal and served their sentences.

The Fansteel company resumed operations. It took back some of the sit-downers who, the company felt, had been drawn into the sit-down through coercion and intimidation by the union. The rest of the sit-downers, those who had been convicted in court, were not taken back. In their places new men were employed.

The union demanded that the company take back all of the sit-downers who wished to return. To enforce this demand the union went before the NLRB.

NLRB DECIDED that the company must reinstate all the sit-downers who wished to return.

NLRB decided further that "in reinstating the strikers— the company must dismiss, if necessary, employes hired for the first time during the strike."

NLRB put its decision mainly on the ground that the Fansteel Co. had itself, in NLRB's judgment, broken the law, in that it had refused to recognize and bargain with the C. I. O. union.

• • • •

FROM THE DECISION of NLRB the Fansteel company appealed to the Federal courts. The United States Circuit Court held that the NLRB decision was wrong; the court held that the Fansteel company did not need to reinstate the sit-downers.

It is this decision which NLRB now asks the Supreme Court of the United States to review. The Supreme Court, under the law, is not required to review the case. It can either reject the application for review, in which event the Circuit Court's decision stands, or the Supreme Court can decide to review the case and thereafter hear argument and hand down a decision of its own.

Today They Cheer

By Barnet Nover

Will They Jeer Tomorrow?

"TODAY," said Robert Walpole in an oft-quoted remark, "they are ringing their bells, but they will wring their hands tomorrow."

The popular ovation which both Neville Chamberlain and Edouard Daladier received at the hands of their fellow citizens in Great Britain and France following their return from Germany, speaks volumes for the enormous relief felt in those countries over the avoidance of war.

How enduring will that heart-felt emotion be? If, as some are predicting the Munich agreement and the partition of Czechoslovakia lead to a real regime of peace of Europe; if Hitler sheathes his sword and Mussolini acts like a dove; if successful efforts are now inaugurated to solve the Spanish problem, reduce armaments and open the channels of trade in the Old World, obviously both the British and the French will feel that the price paid for peace last week was not too high. The acclaim which Mr. Chamberlain, and to a lesser extent M. Daladier, have been receiving will then follow them down the corridors of time.

BUT if not, what then? If the peace made at Munich proves only another breathing spell between one acute crisis and another the present feeling of relief is certain to be followed by one of shame, disgust and alarm. For if Europe becomes more warlike rather than more peaceful, if the threat of force is again applied as an instrument of policy and the necessity again arises of having to choose between war and surrender, Great Britain and France will find themselves in a worse position than they occupied last week.

Then the men now acclaimed as heroes will be denounced as architects of a disaster it was in their power to avoid.

Already, in fact, beneath the chorus of jubilation in London and Paris can be heard a discordant undertone of catcalls and jeers. Yet the opposition neither in Great Britain nor France is likely to get anywhere. The Munich accord will be ratified, if with misgivings. The British and French parliaments have no alternative. They have been presented with an accomplished fact. They are being asked to sign the death certificate of a nation already buried. They will do so.

IN GREAT BRITAIN Mr. Chamberlain's present popularity may endure long enough to make possible a resounding Tory victory should the cabinet decide to hold an election at this time. And it is hard to believe that Chamberlain will repeat the mistake of Disraeli, when, for the first time, a British prime minister came back from Germany proclaiming "peace with honor."

Actually, as practically every historian who has ever discussed the 1878 Congress of Berlin concerning the Balkans points out, Disraeli botched the job of peace-making. He allowed temporary considerations to outweigh fundamental needs. From the time the Berlin treaty was signed until the outbreak of the World War the Balkans remained a breeding ground of dissension and conflict. And at Berlin animosities arose, such as those between Germany and Russia and France and Italy which were to play a great part in ultimately destroying the peace of Europe.

Anyway, the great acclaim which Disraeli received on his return from Berlin 50 years ago, quickly wore off. Two years later his party was defeated at the polls.

Chamberlain may not wait that long. The present House of Commons can stay on until 1940. But it is within the power of the cabinet to hold an election at any time before that. So once more a Tory government may go to the people. In this particular history provides an instructive, if alarming, footnote.

In 1918 the coalition government (largely Conservative) won an election on the issue of hanging the Kaiser and making the Germans pay the costs of the war. In 1923 the Conservatives won an election on the Zinovieff letter. In 1931, under MacDonald, the issue on which the Tories rode to power was that of preserving the gold standard. In 1935, under Stanley Baldwin, the issue was the League as the sheet-anchor of British policy.

History records that the Kaiser was not hanged, the Germans did not pay, Zinovieff did not write the letter attributed to him, the gold standard was scrapped a few days after the Tories won and the sanctions election of 1935 was followed in short order by the infamous Hoare-Laval pact. But, in any event, the Tories stayed in power. They may now prolong their tenure by an election based on the slogan: "He kept us out of war."

• • • •

IN FRANCE, the emotion of gratitude over having avoided war is likely to disappear in a short time. For once the tears arising from the grave danger of last week have subsided, the French are likely to begin counting the costs. They will not like them. Their reactions may be those of a patient whose gratitude at having been saved from a mortal illness evaporates when the doctor's bill arrives.

France today finds herself in a pitiable state. She has lost, or is about to lose, all her allies in the east—Czechoslovakia, the most loyal of all her post-war partners; Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia, Soviet Russia. She still has Great Britain whose prime minister has graciously informed the Paris government that the no-war exchange between him and Hitler should not worry France. But the greater the dependence on London, the more France is at Britain's mercy. From now on, it is not too much to say, no government can long hold office in France that does not have British approval. From now on every French foreign minister will be the prisoner of Downing street.

There is a further consideration which, sooner or later, is certain to determine the British and French attitude regarding the Munich peace. For years Italy was held to scorn, even by her allies, for having repudiated the triple alliance, though she had a legal right to do so.

For years one of the principal factors in creating the intense suspicion of Soviet Russia was the circumstance that the Bolsheviks had made a separate peace with the Kaiser, though there was practically no alternative.

Thus the betrayal of Czechoslovakia will be remembered when the relief over the avoidance of war has long been forgotten. And that will be true both in Great Britain and France, even if the promise of peace held out by Chamberlain proves more than a seven-days illusion.

Lloyd Streamlines His 'If I Were King'

Ronald Colman Stars in Filmed Romance
Notable Bill Opens at Keith's Thursday
Jottings of the Theater World

BASED on, but by no means a carbon copy of, Justin Huntly McCarthy's familiar play, Paramount's production of "If I Were King" presents many sound qualities of superiority over earlier stage and screen versions of the romantic legend of the court of King Louis XI of France. This has been bruited about through the mails and in personal conversations by studio representatives of the producing company for a good many months now, but yesterday it was conclusively demonstrated by a press preview of the picture in the Twentieth Century-Fox bandbox theater.

BELL.

"If I Were King" is director Frank Lloyd's silver jubilee production and reflects the fruits of many months of thoughtful contemplation of a film play he has long wanted to make. It is, for example, pitched in a modern key, although it is, of course, what is known as a "costume picture;" it has been superbly cast; it has been speeded up in tempo until it sweeps across the screen in an unbroken succession of swift panoramas; it has been directed by Mr. Lloyd with all of his fine flair for color, realism and action.

It is, in short, an especially fine rehabilitation of a stage and screen romantic melodrama that has been popular since its first introduction to the public in 1901. Perhaps "streamlined" is the word. At any rate, it rushes by so smoothly that the "costume" aspect of the work, for once, does not serve as an impediment to the more important factors of dramatic interest, subtle humor and high romanticism. All of the earmarks of a smashing box-office hit seem to be present—as a record first week in New York also would seem to prove.

Frank Lloyd is a director who does not fritter his time away on mediocre stories—"The Sea Hawk," "Cavalcade," "Mutiny on the Bounty" and "Wells Fargo" may be cited as evidence—and Ronald Colman, star of the present subject, is another whose name seldom has been associated with trivialities—possibly "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" is as close as he ever has come to it. This is Colman's first picture since "The Prisoner of Zenda" and, as was remarked by one of the small audience at yesterday's preview, affords him more action in the first two reels than the Anthony Hope vehicle did in its entire length.

The distinction of the picture's casting, however, does not end with Mr. Colman. Basil Rathbone, in the role of Louis XI, offers a complete departure from his usual type of portrayal and emerges from a long line of villainously "heavy" roles in the guise of one of the cinema's pre-eminent character actors. Mr. Rathbone's performance should win him some sort of Academy award in the 1938 voting. Frances Dee, in the role of Katherine De Vaucelles, matches the best work she has ever done for the cameras and a newcomer to feminine leading roles, in the person of Ellen Drew, leaves an indelible impression.

Besides all these, the roster is sprinkled with the names of players who long since have earned their spurs, among them Stanley Ridges, former leading man with the National Theater Players; Francis McDonald, Walter Kingsford, Ralph Forbes, Henry Wilcoxon, Sidney Toler, William Farnum and numerous others. Alma Lloyd, daughter of the producer-director, appears in a part that is considerably more than a "bit" and does it well.

In the role of Francois Villon's foster father—a character new to the play, who supplants the figure of Villon's mother in the interest of dramatic vigor as opposed to artificial sympathy—fine work is done by C. V. France, an English actor new to American audiences.

"If I Were King" will not be along to the local screen for some weeks yet, but it is well worth waiting for and deserves a place high on the list of any theatergoer's happiest anticipations.

• • • •

Yesterday's screening was preceded by a luncheon at the Washington, spread by Division Manager Carter Barron, of Loew's, Inc., in honor of Lou Smith, associate producer of the picture, who brought the advance print of "If I Were King" to town for the particular edification of the drama desks and the Paramount executives in Washington. He came East to bring Ellen Drew to the New York premiere of her most important picture to date and is returning at once to Hollywood to complete the preparation of the next story to be filmed by Mr. Lloyd, an item bearing the title of "Ruler of the Seas." He then will return again to the East Coast to greet the director upon his return from Europe, early in November, and probably will visit the Capital then in company with Mr. Lloyd. An energetic and discerning young man, this Lou Smith, and a nice fellow to have around.

• • • •

It is a notable bill that Manager Hardie Meakin, of RKO-Keith's will break out on Fifteenth street come Thursday. The chief screen feature will be "Youth Takes a Fling," costarring Andrea Leeds and Joel McCrea for the first time. The inclusion of secondary importance will be Walt Disney's tenth anniversary production of "The Brave Little Tailor," a Mickey Mouse subject, running to a little greater length than usual and executed, I believe, in the most improved Technicolor. Then will come the latest release of the "March of Time," documentary newsreel, dealing with "The British Dilemma" and U. S. Fire Fighters."

Perhaps time should be taken out to say that it is Mickey Mouse's tenth anniversary that is being celebrated, and not Mr. Disney's. Quite a fuss is being made over his "Brave Little Tailor" throughout the country.

And that "British Dilemma" clip should prove exceptionally interesting at just this time, too, since it presents a searching analysis of Hitler's ambitious plans of conquest as they affect Britain's foreign policy. "March of Time" shows how, when 14 years ago Hitler laid down in "Mein Kamf" his plans for conquest, he also planned to keep England either friendly or neutral in the struggle by which he aimed, finally, to annihilate France and establish Germany as a world power second to none. For this purpose—to determine just how far England could be pushed before she would fight—"March of Time" shows that Hitler has maintained a bureau of war psychology, where the reactions of British populations to air raids and their resistance to fear in war-torn lands have been carefully measured. From these observations, "March of Time" draws its own conclusions.

It ought to be worth seeing—and probably remembering.

The Players Club of the Community Center Department, under the direction of Eileen Fowler, well-known player-director of the former Columbia Players and more recent Civic Theater of Washington, is planning an excursion into the Irish field of drama as a departure from the usual paths of the Capital's semiprofessional acting groups. The first production will be Sean O'Casey's "The Shadow of a Gunman," considered by many his best play, scheduled for presentation in the Roosevelt High School Auditorium on November 16. For the principal role, Murray Sheehan has been selected. To those who remember Mr. Sheehan's splendid performance in the Civic Theater's production of ". . . one-third of a nation . . ." at Wardman Park last season, this seems an eminently judicious choice.

Among its instructors in stagecraft have been such well-known figures in the theater as Clifford Brooke, John McKee, Addison Pitt, George Vivian and Dorothy Martin. Many of last season's students were given individual opportunities at Mr. Cochran's Olney Theater. With the opening of the Olney's second season, planned for early May, this outlet for promising talent is expected to be greatly increased.

A voince out of the past spoke words of wistdom, compassion and justice to a troubled and turburlent present in the National Theater last night.

Those words were placed in the mouth of Abraham Lincoln, not yet come to the greatness and immortality that later were to be his, and formed the basis of a profoundly moving drama that brings dignity and luster early to the theater's new season of 1938. For the first time in many seasons a distinguished audience remained seated after the fall of the final curtain to shout "bravos" to the unseen author and his visible players on the stake and accord "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" 15 spontaneous and tumultuous curtain calls that were ended only by the stubborn refusal of thec urtain to rise again and the raising of the house lights.

It was a "first night" such as playwrights covet, actors dream of and audiences encounter all too seldom.

Robert E. Sherwood has written "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" in three acts and 12 scenes that present in cameo vignettes the salient influences and events that early in life shaped the destiny of a young Lincoln distrustful of his own capabilities, disturbed by his seeming inability to hew a place of usefulness in the world about him and bewildered by the admiration of friends who perceived in the rugged honesty of his character qualities of which he was not consciously aware; a Lincoln abashed in the presence of love, brave in the face of physical bullies and invincible in the cold logic of debate.

A Reluctant Hero

The illumination of these contradictory phases of a kindly, compassionate and complex character cover the period from Lincoln's early coaching in the rudiments of orderly thinking in the dim-lit cabin of Mentor Graham's little cabin in New Salem to the day of his departure from Springfield to assume the Presidency of the United States in Washington, a reluctant hero to his townsmen, fearful of the future and still distrustful of the future and still distrustful of his own ability to cope with the overpowering problems that confronted him.

There is tremendous drama, quiet humor and infinite pathos in this revelation of a Lincoln never before so minutely, so sympathetically or so authentically defined upon the stage of a theater. And interwoven with the purely personal aspects of an engrossing character study are those vivid flashes of American idealism that so comprehensively answer the pressing problems of the present day as to make the play seem almost the perfect commentary upon the individual, political and social needs of our own times. It is, perhaps this very bridging of today's imponderable perplexities with those of almost a century ago that make "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" so interesting, so compelling and so vital a drama.

Withal its many scenes and episodic form, the play is a closely-knit and continuously moving recital of incident that contributes unfailingly to its major purpose and cumulative effect. It is homgeneous, coherent and direct. Its dominant figure, of course, always is the gaunt, gangling Lincoln. The unusually large number of other characters in the development of mighty events and one of the world's immortals are merely contributory to the evolution of the greatness that centered in a single man.

Massey Ideal Choice

Raymond Massey in the title role justifies all of the confidence that was reposed in him as the ideal selection for the part by Robert Sherwood and Maxwell Anderson, Sidney Howard, S. N. Behrman and Elmer Rice, the director of the play, who form the playwright's producing company. In appearance, Massey is startlingly like Lincoln and one suspects that the resemblance extends even to voice and manner of speech. His assumption of the character is marked, furthermore, by a deftly wrought suggestion of slowly expanding grasp of both the joys and sorrows of living in a world of bitter conflict, tragic griefs and petty annoyances. His wooing of Ann Rutledge is eloquent in awkward tenderness, his vacillation in the face of Mary Todd's soaring ambition humble and his later discomfiture at her bitter recriminations not without violent resentment. In the debates with Douglas he is the shrewd and homely orator knowing his way to his hearers' minds and hearts. It is a variegated, finely rounded and convincing characterization Raymond Massey brings to Mr. Sherwood's sterling and timely play and the humility of its central character.

The long supporting cast abounds in players who lend efficient delineation and effective contrast to the impressive shaping of the three acts. Muriel Kirkland is a vivacious and independent Mary Todd in the early periods of the action and an irritating harridan after 18 years of driving effort to realize her life's ambition to be the wife of a President. Much gentler and more ingenuous is Adele Longmire in the important, but less conspicuous, role of Ann Rutledge. Of Lincoln's legal and political associates, Arthur Griffin, as Judge Bowling Green; Lewis Martin, as Ninian Edwards; Calvin Thomas, as Joshua Speed, and Wendell K. Phillips, as William Herndon contribute most to the fullness of the drama, with Albert Philips lending a touch of additional strength in the role of Stephen A. Douglas. Frank Andrews is the Mentor Graham; Lillian Foster an appealingly sympathetic Nancy Green and Howard Da Silva a blustering and ominous Jack Armstrong, chief hoodlum of the little town of New Salem. All the others are more than adequate.

Notables in Attendance

Last night's first performance on any stage was not without its moments of uncertainty and minor physical difficulties, but they were of such insignificance as to leave no important blemish upon the evening's unequivocal triumph. Jo Milziner's settings and the costumes designed by Rose Bogdanoff were important adjuncts to the play's success.

Mr. Sherwood and his producing associates, Lee Shubert and many other New York theatrical notables and critics from other cities were among those who swelled last night's audience at the National. "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" deserves capacity houses through a long and successful life.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Oct. 3.—When our No. 1 G-man, J. Edgar Hoover, lingers more than a couple of days, you can make bets it isn't for his health, social visit or romance. I hear his present story is to catch grabbers who have threatened Jane Withers. Guards have been trippled around her house for the last two weeks.

HEDDA HOPPER

With most stars discussing new wardrobes, I think it's fun telling you the cost of Jane's in "Arizona Wildcat"—all of $6.75. A pair of blue jeans, rope and print dress. Speaking of clothes, Edith Head's done a black velvet gown with a mirrored corselet, about 5 inches wide, for Madeleine Carroll in "Cafe Society." That will pick up the reflection of the customers and hold attention.

The announcement that Myrna Loy is to play opposite Warner Baxter in "He Married His Wife," is a little premature. Warner first has to do a picture at Warner Brothers. He's highest priced star in Hollywood. And his new contract at Twentieth Century—which has not yet been signed—calls for plenty of extra sugar.

It's good news that Fannie Brice will be in Hedy LaMarr's next picture. If that "Good News" air show doesn't improve, I have an idea Baby Snooks will be seeking another home soon.

One of the nicest, cleverest girls in town is Kay Mulvey, who for years stirred up magazine stories about M.-G.-M. biggies. She'll be leaving the studio in a few weeks. Has a swell new job with Ladies' Home Journal and Collier's. Good luck, Kay, we'll be missing you.

Luise Rainer doesn't see how a reconciliation, without any communication with Clifford Odets is possible. So until the truth becomes stranger than fiction, that's that.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Oct. 3.

THURSDAY EVENING, G. Hall Roosevelt, brother-in-law of President Roosevelt, attended the jai-alai games at the Hippodrome and asked the management to let him make an announcement . . . Mr. Roosevelt stepped to the microphone and told the audience that this was a memorable evening, because of the peace pact effected that day—"A night of glorious jubilee, calling for celebration" . . . He then declared that in his party were the five German transatlantic flyers, and, as an indication of celebration, asked the audience to applaud . . . The audience responded immediately—with razzberries.

LUPE VELEZ is suffering from laryngitis and insists she's unable to perform in "You Never Know." If Lupe can't make the show, her substitute will be June Hovack, sister of Gypsy Rose Lee . . . Gypsy, incidentally, who spurned burlesque in favor of a vaudeville tour, has hired Rags Ragland—of Minsky's Gaiety Theater . . . Lanny Ross will appear in the new Casa Manana show . . . Katharine Cornell, who was stranded when the storm hit her Martha's Vineyard estate, rowed across the Sound and then hitch-hiked to Boston.

THE PARADISE Restaurant's new revue, which made its debut Thursday night, is a delight to Broadway. The girls are the prettiest and the revue packs as much entertainment as ever was seen on a night-club floor . . . Paula Stone, daughter of Fred, has joined the list of Al Siegel pupils . . . Mischa Auer has signed to make personal appearances at the Paramount . . . Samuel Seabury, who indorsed Thomas E. Dewey's nomination for Governor this week, four months ago had pondered over the advisability of becoming defense counsel for Jimmy Hines.

DR. DAFOE went to Washington to visit the White House . . . Although Dafoe had been alloted a five-minute visit, he was closeted with the President for almost half an hour . . . When he emerged, his publicist tried to ascertain the substance of their conversation, to deliver it to the press for exploitation . . . Dafoe refused, insisting that it was extremely confidential . . . After lengthy pleas, the distraught press agent shrieked: "Can't you tell me a word about it?" . . . "One word? Yes," replied Dafoe. "Babies."

IN ASTORIA, where the movie version of "one-third of a nation" is being screened, the two most lonesome persons are Sylvia Sidney and Leif Erickson, who appear in the movie . . . Sylvia is lonesome for her groom, Luther Adler . . . And Erickson longs for his wife, Frances Farmer . . . And the absent mates of these two people are appearing together in Chicago, in "Golden Boy."

MYRON McCORMICK, who appears in "one-third of a nation" is called upon to wear an old suit—for one of the tenement scenes . . . McCormick was unable to find a suitable outfit until yesterday—when he appeared on the lot wearing an old suit and hat . . . Dudley Murphy, who is directing the movie, complimented McCormick upon these acquisitions. "And from what bum did you get this old outfit?" he asked . . . "Well," Myron confessed, "Burges Meredith gave me the suit. He wore it in 'Winterset.' The hat is Guthrie McClintic's."

Bette Finds Home 3,300 Miles Away

When Bette Davis returned from her vacation at Lake Tahoe, her first visit to the Warner Bros. back lot convinced her that Corrigan wasn't the only one who traveled the wrong way.

As part of the New England village set recently constructed for "Nancy Drew, Detective," first of the new Warner Bros. series, Bette found the house where she was born. It should have been 3,300 miles east, in Newton, Mass., not in Burbank, Calif.

Art Director Stanley Fleischer borrowed photographs of old New England homes from the Warner Bros. research department before he designed the "Nancy Drew" set. One of the photographs he chose to reproduce was a picture of Bette's old home in New England.

Without Friends or Beaux, Girl of 26 Does Not Care To Live Unless Plight Is Remedied

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: From early childhood I have had an inferiority complex. My parents were poor but not so poor as indifferent, and my mother never took the trouble to dress me becomingly so I went to school with unattractive clothes. I resented being looked down on and made fun of because my clothes weren't right, and developed a feeling of inferiority that has caused me misery ever since.

As I have grown older, I have tried to be agreeable but am naturally reserved and aloof. All my life I have been told that people do not like me. I'm convinced by now that they don't—and that they do not understand me. They think I am queer, unkind, and some have accused me of being "stuck up." In college the girls did not understand me and did not bother to be friendly with me. I was left alone so much that it was humiliating. I am always alone and lonely. I have almost come to the conclusion that I am a social misfit; that I just can't mix with people.

Having an unfortunate personality and not being beautiful or charming, I have no men friends at present and fear that I will be lonely the rest of my life. And, too, my clothes are hardly passable, as I have little money to spend on them. In fact, I cannot do myself justice. I am considered attractive but I know that average good looks don't get a girl any where. Just what does life offer the girl who is handicapped on every side and who has no social background?

When I think of the unhappy past and the lonely future I am almost ready to give up in despair. Sometimes I think of taking my life. If the future is to be a duplication of the past, I do not care to live. I am 26 years old. Have you any suggestion to offer? DESPONDENT.

Ten Magnetic Traits

DEAR DESPONDENT: Ten traits most frequently associated with attractive personality, together with ten traits most frequently associated with unattractive personality, are listed in an article by Dick Carlson in the October issue of Your Life, a monthly magazine which describes itself as "the popular guide to desirable living." (You can get a copy of this magazine at any newsstand; and I daresay it is on file at the local public library.)

Mr. Carlson's findings are the result of a two-year survey on the subject of personality, conducted, with the co-operation of several thousand adults, in connection with his classes in personality-development at the University of California. He finds that "there is little mystery in what goes to make up (pleasing) personality."

"Over and over again, hundreds of times," he writes, "the same traits were mentioned as . . . making for an attractive or unattractive personality,"—although the habit of cheerfulness proved to be, by long odds, the favorite human virtue. "In fact, it was mentioned 75 times oftener than all the other traits put together," he says. "So take a tip: if you want to be thought of as having an attractive personality . . . you will have to be cheerful, unselfish, have a sense of humor, be enthusiastic, careful about your personal habits and appearance, have poise and not be conceited or a braggart. That shouldn't be so difficult, should it?"

Carefully, specifically, he lists in the order of their importance the ten traits which appear to make one "popular with both men and women and rarely . . . without invitations to dinner or theater parties." They are: 1. Cheerfulness. 2. Friendliness. 3. Neatness, cleanliness. 4. A readiness to help. 5. Pleasantness. 6. Unselfishness. 7. A sense of humor. 8. Thoughtfulness. 9. Enthusiasm. 10. Poise. Conversely, he lists the ten traits most to be avoided, which are: 1. Selfishness. 2. Untidiness. 3. Conceit. 4. Pessimism. 5. Unsociableness. 6. Braggadocio. 7. Carelessness. 8. Disloyalty. 9. Frowning. 10. Complaining, shiftlessness.

In conclusion, Mr. Carlson supplies "four good questions to keep in mind for a personal development program." These questions are: "1. What unattractive habits ought you to replace with attractive habits? 2. What likable habits do you need to develop? 3. What type of program do you need to set up to help you? 4. When are you going to begin working your program?" He points out that while "many intricate methods for the development of personality are on the market . . . there is nothing so complicated about improving personality," providing you have "a real desire for an improved personality—not just a vague wish," and providing you will "work for improvement in those habits you desire to develop—not just wish for improvement."

In my opinion, the most helpful suggestion I can give is that you study Mr. Carlson's article in its entirety, and reshape your social approach in the light of its findings. If you are at all sensitive to implication, you should become aware of the fact that you yourself are far more to blame for your lack of social success than are your parents, through their early neglect, or society, because of it's alleged failure to sympathize or understand.

It should dawn on you that you have been failing, since attaining an age which should make for reasoned self-government, to develop positive attributes of pleasing personality; and that, furthermore, you have been guilty, to a crippling degree, of the faults of selfishness (undue self-concern; excessive preoccupation with your own feelings and reactions), pessimism (despair; the thought of taking your life), unsociableness ("naturally reserved and aloof"), disloyalty (to your parents), and complaining (of others' alleged unfair treatment and misunderstanding, of being "handicapped on every side," of having "no social background," etc.). Good Talk Wins Friends

DON joins Kate for another long talk—and they just met yesterday! What is Kate's conversational magic?

She knows that what you say when you first meet a person is all-important. It's a sample really of what you have to offer as a companion.

What sort of "sample" do you give? After your first "how-de-do" do you let the other fellow do all the digging for topics? Do you strike a whiny note with "The meals at camp are so rotten this year?" Do you let on you're bored, by contributing such squelchers as "Really, I'm not much interested in aviation exploits?"

After such remarks, you'll have a hard time convincing anyone you've enthusiasm or brains. Learn simple ways of quickly putting yourself across as gay, interesting.

Draw out people with such talk-starters as "Do you live here in Plainville?" "Such excitement today about the tennis tournament. Are you following it?"

And how gracious, warm-hearted you appear when you praise—"such a lovely room," "such a gorgeous location for the camp."

As for topics you're not up on—it won't hurt you a bit to learn something about them. If you look interested, say "tell me something about that flight," people will think you a bright, wide-awake girl. They'll want to see more of you.

Can you keep them charmed? Of course you can—with pointers from our 40-page booklet, "Improving Your Conversation." Gives examples of typical conversations, breaks to avoid, suggestions on vocabulary, what to talk about, a good speaking voice.

Health

Breathing Is Complex Process

Two Types Defined Internal and External Doctor Explains Both

By Logan Clendening, M. D.

THE BODY obtains its all essential oxygen from the oxygen of the air. A load of air is pumped in and out of the lungs about eighteen times a minute, day and night, from birth to death. When this air reaches the final thin walled termini of the lungs—the alveoli—it is separated from a great layer of massed blood only by the thinnest membrane. The oxygen diffuses through this membrane by the selective action of the blood and from thence is carried to the tissues.

Physiologists make a distinction between internal respiration and external respiration. Internal respiration is the gaseous exchange that occurs in the internal tissues, such as the muscles. External respiration is the movements of the chest and the exchange in the alveoli of the lungs.

Storehouse of Oxygen

In internal respiration, the red blood corpuscles are the storehouse of oxygen, but the oxygen that is diffused to the tissues is carried in the plasma or liquid medium of the blood in which the corpuscles float. When the plasma supply gets low, the corpuscles, as warehouses, give up their extra supply. Then by processes too complicated to attempt to detail here, the blood takes up the waste product, carbon dioxide, from the tissues.

When the blood goes out from the lungs, it has an oxygen tension of 90 mm. and a carbon dioxide tension of 40 mm. When it returns by way of the veins, it has an oxygen tension of 40 mm. and a carbon dioxide tension of 46 mm.

The act of external respiration is accomplished by the movements of the ribs and diaphragm. The ribs are raised by a large number of muscles in the chest and neck. At the same time that the ribs go up, the diaphragm goes down, which creates an extra space amounting to about four quarts of air, if strained to its maximum capacity, and one to two quarts at ordinary breathing.

Controlled By Will

These muscles are under the control of our wills. It is true we breathe regularly without thinking about it, but we can slow or increase the rate as we wish (within limits). But breathing should be described as automatic rather than involuntary. To accomplish this adjustment, there is a complicated set of nerve centers and nerve fibers going to the centers of these muscle innervations in the spinal cord or lower nerve centers. It is easy to see that the control is largely chemical. When carbon dioxide accumulates in the blood, it stimulates the respiratory center, which increases the breathing rate, washing carbon dioxide out and raising the content of oxygen.

Beauty

Loss of Weight Doesn't Make Perfect Figure

Reducer Is Disappointed
Waist Still Too Large
She Failed to Exercise

By Ida Jean Kain.

TALK ABOUT hope springing eternal . . . when a woman does something for her looks, she does it with the ingrained conviction "this will make me beautiful." Otherwise, the beauty business in this country would not be a half billion dollar industry.

And when you go on a diet, you fully expect to finish your reducing with a very good figure. As soon as you lose that 20 or so pounds, you are sure that you will have a tiny waist and divinely slim hips. But, alas, these measures of a beautiful figure are not gained by losing weight.

Reduces in Vain

Now, to show you exactly what often happens when you diet and think that is plenty, we'll take the latest case history. A reducer from Cleveland, Ohio, took off 22 pounds of weight without making a corresponding improvement in her figure. This reducer is 5 feet, 5½ inches tall, and she weighed 156 pounds. As the result of her diet, she has brought her weight down to 134 pounds perfect for that height. She did a good job of reducing her weight and congratulations are in order, but she has not quite finished.

This reducer either failed entirely to exercise, or she adopted exercises of too general a type, for her figure is very little better than when she weighed 156 pounds, as you can see from a study of the following measurements:

	Bust	Waist	Hips
Former measurements	36	31	41
After losing 22 pounds	34	30	38
Perfect measurements	34	26	36½

Waist Too Large

You will notice that the waistline is entirely too large so that, even with perfect weight, her figure is out of proportion. Normalizing the weight usually tends to normalize the bust measurement—which was true in this case—and the hip measurement, only 1½ inches too large since the weight loss, will be easily corrected.

No reducer who takes off 22 pounds is going to let a few inches stand between her and a lovely figure. The thing to be done now is to take that waistline down 4 inches. This should not be attempted with further dieting. The weight is already perfect. Exercise is the next step. Stretching to pull the waist and twisting to squeeze off the excess inches will decrease this measurement so rapidly that it will be down to 26 inches in six weeks.

The Gentler Sex

At the Mirror

No, no, don't move over; I've got loads of room . . . Did you ever see anything like my hair?"

"Did you ever see anything like mine? . . . Come on up, Jane, there's plenty of room."

"Yes, don't let me crowd you out, Jane . . . You know I simply can't make my hair look right in the back—where's the hand mirror? . . . Oh, I'm sorry; I didn't know you had it . . . No, no, you keep it . . ."

"No, that's all right. You take it now and I'll work on my front curls . . . Come on up Jane, there's plenty of room for three."

"Yes, Jane, you can't do anything back there with that compact . . . now WHAT am I going to do about those little wisps in the back?"

"What am I going to do about mine? . . . I'm simply a ruined woman—where did I put my hairpins?"

"I'm disgraced for life . . . Come on up, Jane. Just look at us crowding poor Jane out! You're just too polite, Jane . . . Honestly, this little roll back of my ear is driving me mad—say, can I borrow a couple of your hairpins?"

"Jush . . . ush . . . muh . . . oo . . . goo—There! No, wait till I wipe them off."

"Thanks. What I really need is a new permanent. But this new man I've got says——"

"Permanent! Say, I haven't any permanent. Just look . . . Wait, Jane! I'll be through in a minute. Can I have one of those hairpins back?"

"Don't bother; they're all right . . . What? . . . Wait! It's Grace calling . . . Yes, Grace? . . . We'll be down in a minute."

"I guess we're holding up things, but my hair's so stubborn——"

"Mine's a fright . . . Where's the powder? . . . Oh, I'm sorry . . . no, go ahead."

"My skin simply won't take powder any more."

"Mine won't, either . . . Jane, how CAN you do anything with that compact?"

"Here, Jane, you can have my place—in just a minute . . . Say, have I got on too much rouge?"

"No; have I?"

"No. Say, that's a cute little dress."

"It's old as the hills . . . Jane, I DO wish you would come up here to the mirror . . . What? . . . Yes, Grace? . . . yes, we're coming."

"I suppose we'll have to go down, but I certainly look a fright."

"You look marvelous. Look at me . . . Say, wait a minute till I get this little wisp——"

"Say, have I got on too much lipstick?"

"No; have I?"

"No. Honestly I know I'm the ugliest woman in the world. I'm getting so I just hate to look in the mirror."

"So do I. All right. Let's go. Now, Jane—where IS Jane?"

"She must have gone on downstairs. All right, shall we go?"

Clothed in Chic Modesty

A GOWN that grandmother would approve from the depths of her chaste heart is shown above. While it has all the dash of modernity, it violates none of the canons of Victorianism. Charles Armour, the American designer, gifted with restraint and vision, has set forth a gown that takes to tea time as well as to the cocktail hour. Its simplicity of line plus its intricate nicety of detail made it popular with spectators who viewed a collection of similar styles at a recent local fashion showing. Mr. Armour, like many of his contemporary designers, believes that modesty has its own reward, so he has swathed this model in Boy Blue crepe. He has left no trace of her throat or arms, knowing ing there has been an overdose of nudity this summer and in the current evening mode. Instead, he puffed enormous leg-o-mutton sleeves at the shoulder line and minimized the waist by accenting the bustline with shirring. Result—just the right dash of concealed charms, appealing through repression.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

OUR CAFE society is a'tremble, for a cycle has made a complete round, and come full stop. Mrs. Eve Symington, the pretty, throaty blonde who was our first social lass to sing in a night-spot for vulgar money, has retired from the microphone. It is almost as though Aunt Elsa Maxwell were to cease party-planning.

ALICE HUGHES.

Four years and a half ago Mrs. S. stood up before a mike at a small and snooty institution called the Place Piquale and sang her complete repertoire of four songs. The place was packed with her friends, which the proprietor thought a fine idea. Eve's high barytone improved with use, and soon she was known throughout the East Fifties as the society singer who could really sing. This new fame, and the vital fact that she continued to draw customers with flowing bankrolls, kept hoisting her salary until it was reported, last year, to have reached the noble peak of $1,250 the week, excellent, even if exaggerated.

In her wake streamed other young and lovely creatures who thought singing for pay was nice. Might help to snatch up a few odd hunks of silver fox or even sable remnants. On they came—Addie Moffett Brooks, Marion Pierce, and the rest. And now comes this thunderbolt — the retirement of Evie Symington to the care of her sons Jimmy and Timmy, and days devoted to good works among hospitalized children.

A noble thought, and no doubt Evie's night club pittance can be used by Helen Morgan and other professional ladies. But the fact remains that the great mentor and exemplar of social night club trillers has left the scene. But have no fear—youngsters are coming along, including one named Dorothy Sayers, this fall. And we even import young Sally Clark from Boston!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Can it be that Elsie Janis, late in the forties, is really coming back to the Broadway stage in a show of her own! That is the story, and it would be a great thrill to us old-timers to see the "Sweetheart of the A. E. F." back in town. Elsie is still slim, as she was in her great days, though I haven't seen her for two years, when she sold all the fittings of her lovely home up the Hudson.

Of the younger kids, I saw Toby Wing make her Broadway debut in "You Never Know." She's a shapely, cute little blonde, as moviegoers know, but I still think her greatest talent is wearing a swimming suit on a sun-kissed cinema shore.

That blond Cleveland kid, Ted Peckham, keeps expanding his now-famed Escort Service. He writes me that his latest stunt is to furnish expert shoppers to run through the entire Christmas lists of busy executives and career women (this is a left-jab at me, not meant of course.) The outfit buys wholesale and watches for all sorts of sales. Alert kid, this.

We were all happy that Peggy Conklin, so well known on stage and screen, had her little girl baby all right up at the Greenwich Hospital. Peggy says that late in the season she proposes to go right on with her profession, and why not? She has youth, beauty, high talent.

Never an election day passes without a few choice yarns in a stockade of this size. For instance, Mrs. Dorothy Eddy started out to cast her ballot in her Brooklyn precinct. But on the way to the polling place she thought it might be a smarter notion to go to St. Mary's Hospital. She did, and next day became the mama of a daughter. No vote, but nice baby.

Back to town has come Leona Jay Miller, who in her debutante year of 1935 advertised here, "Personable young woman, weary of social ho-hum, seeks action, hardship. Will join scientist, hunter to remote regions." Out of 8,000 letters, she accepted that of Explorer Charles C. Miller, and she accepted his proposal on the boat. After a two-year honeymoon in New Guinea, they're back in town—but anxious to shove off again. Well, there's one minx who got what she wanted.

Semi-regular report on local merchants. Still smiling. A cool turn in our so-called weather sent the ladies flocking in to shop, and the better-grade merchandise, especially, is moving over the counters in a fairly soul-stirring way.

Beam, Belles! Beaux Balk At the Blues

Always Be Gay
Don't Criticize
Accept Dates Casually

By Genevieve Reynolds.

BE GAY and pleasant. And don't confide your loneliness, troubles and past disappointments to a strange man if you want to make a favorable impression and keep his friendship. This is the advice of Mrs. Martha Taylor Hughes, originator and director of the Social Introductions Bureau in Washington.

Reading the forlorn letters in local newspapers of men and women who are lonely in the city, Mrs. Hughes conceived the idea of establishing a bureau to arrange legitimate introductions between men and women of similar tastes, background and education.

However, before accepting any applicant as a client Mrs. Hughes interviews each one personally and investigates his or her record. From the interview she judges the applicant's background and personality and arranges the introductions accordingly.

Don't Reveal Dejection

In constant contact with women of all ages, Mrs. Hughes believes many women defeat their purpose of gaining beaux by revealing their dejection over not having a normal social life.

"Too many girls who are lonely spoil their chances of getting a desirable boy friend by telling the escort of the evening about their tribulations," she said. Often suffering from their sheer boredom or disillusionment, many girls set up a guard or defensive attitude against every man they meet. And the man of the moment quickly senses this attitude and resents it. Therefore, he looks around for a more agreebale companion

On the other hand, a girl should not seem too eager to make a good impression. She should appear interested but not overly anxious. Her best technique is to accept the date on a casual friendly basis, according to Mrs. Hughes, who gets her information first-hand from the men that she introduces through the bureau.

Don't Criticize

"A critical attitude is another "don't" for a girl who would make a friend or husband out of an acquaintance," said Mrs. Hughes. "For certainly the girls who sit at home night after night and yet desire to have masculine attention cannot afford to be openly critical of the man who is willing to entertain them without previous acquaintance.

"Even if the girl doesn't like the man in question it is wise to cultivate his friendship, for through his friendship she is likely to meet other men whom she wuold find more interesting. That is the best way to enlarge the circle of masculine friends."

When trying to make contacts in a strange city it is unwise for a girl to pretend popularity. She should not feign engagements to convince the man who asks her for a date that she has other admirers. He will get tired of trying and seek other girls who are apparently less busy, warns Mrs. Hughes.

"Specifically, how can a girl get a beau in Washington?" Mrs. Hughes was asked.

"Make the effort," she replied. "A girl must be willing to inconvenience herself occasionally to meet unattached men. And it can be done if she will seize the opportunity when it arises. Furthermore, she must create the opportunity by going places where she can meet both boys and girls. Girls have to make an effort to meet the right sort and then make themselves attractive enough to be remembered."

Lettuce-Shaped Dish Is a la Mode for Salad

No sailing under false colors for the table accessories used in the American home this winter.

When its use is to hold salad, the dish itself will resemble a lettuce leaf in shape and color, with perhaps a miniature rake and pitchfork for use as serving spoon and fork. If it's a pitcher and is destined to serve its purpose in life as a pitcher for tomato juice, the pitcher will, in color and shape, resemble the tomato.

These, with a variety of other table accessories, were introduced this week at the Merchandise Mart, Chicago, as suggestions for a colorful informal table. "Bake in them and then serve" items in pottery, introduced a few seasons ago, have added a variety of new items for use, ranging from a clever tiny white casserole, decorated on top with various colored vegetables, to bakers resembling pineapples, potatoes, oranges,

Rich Long Furs Dominate Paris Style Salons

Paris (AP).—Luxurious long furs of skunk, fox and lynx with astrakhan, seal and beaver at the "short" end are dominating the early winter fashions now being paraded in the Paris style salons.

Whole sleeves are made of fur, fur collars and yokes are cut in one with sleeve tops. Muffs flourish in all furs, and in all shapes and sizes. It's a toss-up between the fur turbans and the fur hoods, with fur-trimmed gloves to match either way.

The day silhouette goes in for width and fullness. More flare to princess coats, to dress and suit skirts, and swaggers often pleated at center or sides. Bloused backs, built-out shoulders and large sleeve tops add their quota to the yardage upkeep. Some coat sleeves are wide at the elbow, others flared, bell fashion, at the wrist.

Electric Dish Washers Versatile

Will Do Everything System Saves Time
Suds Important

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

I'VE BEEN looking into the question of electric dishwashers and I have decided that they've been neglected long enough. If you operate them right, they do a much more thorough and hygienic job of dish washing than you can do by hand—no offense intended. Did you know that you can do everything in the dishwasher, including the pots and pans? And that it dries then, too? And that you can buy a dishwaster on time payments? So you see you don't have to wash another dish unless you really think it's a lot of fun.

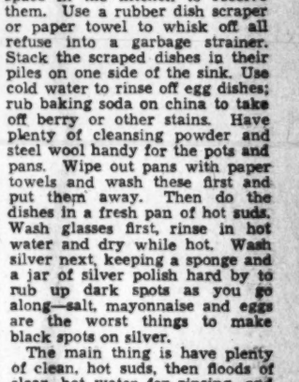

The thing that sells me on the idea is that dishwashing comes around three times a day—yet I wouldn't be without electric laundry equipment when I only have to do that job once a week.

You guessed it—I don't have one myself—I'm just at the point where I discuss them often and longingly when the man of the house is in hearing.

In the meantime, I've worked out a system for dishwashing by hand that saves time and trouble. The first tip is trays—plenty of them to carry loads to and from the dining room. Then—when bringing dishes from the dining room, be sure to have a cleared space in the kitchen to receive them. Use a rubber dish scraper or paper towel to whisk off all refuse into a garbage strainer. Stack the scraped dishes in their piles on one side of the sink. Use cold water to rinse off egg dishes; rub baking soda on china to take off berry or other stains. Have plenty of cleansing powder and steel wool handy for the pots and pans. Wipe out pans with paper towels and wash these first and put them away. Then do the dishes in a fresh pan of hot suds. Wash glasses first, rinse in hot water and dry while hot. Wash silver next, keeping a sponge and a jar of silver polish hard by to rub up dark spots as you go along—salt, mayonnaise and eggs are the worst things to make black spots on silver.

The main thing is have plenty of clean, hot suds, then floods of clear, hot water for rinsing, and yards of dry absorbent cup towels. When I go to it with my sleeves rolled up and everything at hand just so, I don't mind the job so much. In fact there are times when I get quite a good old-fashioned gusto out of stacking up shining piles of clean dishes.

Society Notables See Court Open Season

Mrs. Hughes Early
Mrs. Taft Attends
McReynolds Absent

By Hope Ridings Miller.
The Post Society Editor.

ALTHOUGH IT WAS hardly worth the trouble—going all the way down to the Supreme Court to see the justices take their seats and dispatch 15 minutes of routine—a sizeable number of social notables shone among the legal lights yesterday for the first meeting of the 1936-39 session. In recent years, attendance at the annual reopening of the country's highest court has become quite fashionable, and even when there is nothing exciting on the program, there's a representative number of bigwigs in the audience.

Many who saw the highest tribunal in all its dignity yesterday at noon, donned silks and satins and black ties last evening to see "Abe Lincoln in Illinois." There, again, the spotlight fell once more on the judiciary when the leading character in his debate with Stephen A. Douglas reminded his audience that after all the Supreme Court is comprised "of only mortal men." But that is another story.

In a quarter of an hour yesterday's meeting was all over. The Chief Justice and all his associates, with the exception of Justice McReynolds, had taken their places and the court had opened for the season. A crowd that had been assembling for well over an hour centered its attention on the group of black-robed men on the bench and paid close attention as the Chief Justice voiced a tribute to the late Justice Cardozo. A few minutes later, during the routine of swearing in a flock of lawyers from all parts of the country, there was time to look about and see who was in the crowd.

MRS. HUGHES, wife of the Chief Justice, was among those arriving early. Wearing a trim black suit with a felt hat to match, she was there half an hour before the opening. For fully 15 minutes, she was the only person in the section reserved for relatives and friends of the justices. Then along came Mrs. William Howard Taft, who has been a fairly regular attendant at the opening session ever since her late husband was Chief Justice.

Mrs. Hugo Black, trimly turned out in a black outfit, set off with silver fox neckpiece and white gloves, was the next to arrive. With her were a trio of women who took their places in the second row with her. Whispered comments here and there in the crowd mentioned that Mrs. Black looked much better this year than last, when her husband's appointment had occasioned so much comment. Certainly she never was lovelier than yesterday as she left the courtroom completely surrounded by a bevy of friends.

MRS. STANLEY REED, wife of the newest justice, also was on hand for the opening. She wore a smart black suit with a white blouse and a snappy black hat trimmed with red. Like Mrs. Black she arrived with a number of friends, all of whom were seated near her.

Mrs. Stone and Mrs. Roberts were not there, although both have frequently attended opening sessions in recent years. The former is busy getting her home on Wyoming avenue in order for the winter. She and Justice Stone, having been away all summer, returned to the Capital Thursday. Mrs. Roberts still is at Kimberton, Chester County, Pa., enjoying the October weather on the Roberts' farm. She is not expected to be back at her house on Thirty-first street until the first of next month.

The Attorney General, Homer S. Cummings, was there as would be expected; also the Solicitor General, Robert H. Jackson, who was accompanied by Mrs. Jackson. Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark was with Mrs. Emil Hurja and the two were glimpsed afterward chatting with Mrs. Thurman Arnold.

As a rule, Justice McReynolds not only occupies his seat at the reopening of the Court, but also he has a number of guests there. Yesterday, however, he was out of town and places generally reserved for his friends were filled by others. Incidentally, of all the Justices who traveled widely this summer, Justice McReynolds has the most miles to his credit. Down to his home in Elkton, Ky., and out to California he went before he sailed for Europe, where he made an extended tour of England and the Continent.

Hulls Vacation

Mrs. Cordell Hull accompanied her husband, the Secretary of State, when he left yesterday for a brief rest at an unannounced destination.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

THE HORSES of the Mexican Army team, here for the Inter-American Horse Show opening October 20, are all named for old Aztec gods. Fortunately this year none of the names runs to more than three syllables; the officers were discouraged by their experience here two years ago, when one horse, Quetzalcoatl, had to be re-christened Don Juan, as Americans could only refer to him by pointings of the finger.

Although the show is still several weeks off, both the Chilean and Mexican army officers are up early these days and are at Fort Myer before 8 o'clock to exercise their mounts. It took the Chilean horses 28 days by boat to get here; when they left Chile it was snowing, a few days later they ran into equatorial temperatures, and now they have to get adjusted to the Washington climate. The officers say it takes one day on land to make up for every day the mounts spent at sea.

THEIR EARLY risings do not rule night life out for the officers, however, and last evening both teams were guests of Commissioner and Mrs. Melvin C. Hazen at the opening of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" at the National. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Wood Roberts, jr., the latter vice chairman of the entertainment committee, were also in the group. Other evenings have been spent by the riders attending informal parties given by their friends among the staffs of the Mexican and Chilean embassies. The officers are adhering to the South American custom of a siesta every day after lunch.

EACH foreign team has eight horses, to the United States team's 12. The Mexican and Chilean are fed a pound of sugar a day mixed with their carrots. The coming event is more a riding exhibition than a horse show, some of the jumps running to a breadth of 16 feet, so both the horses and the riders must be trained athletes.

Maj. Eduardo Janez, captain of the Chilean team, is as good as driving a racing car as he is at mounting a horse, and last year won several automobile trophies in Chile. Senora Janez, who came to the Inter-American here two years ago as a bride, will fly from her homeland to be present for the events. Senora de Castro, wife of another Chilean officer, will arrive a week from today.

Yesterday the members of both teams were received by Brig. Gen. Jonathan Wainwright at his quarters at Fort Myer.

THE IMPOSING Leiter mansion on Dupont circle will not be opened for some time to come. Mrs. Joseph Leiter is postponing her return from her summer home at Beverly, Mass., until November 10. She will give her annual concert for the benefit of the Georgetown Visitation Convent November 17.

• • • •

LANDING in New York yesterday must have been something of an anticlimax for several hundred of the passengers of the Queen Mary, among whom were Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Davis and Benjamin Plunket of the British Embassy. Many of the passengers had been jammed aboard in an effort to get out of Europe during last week's war scare, and cots were set up in the drawing room, the gymnasium and the broadcasting room.

• • • •

MRS. ELDRIDGE JORDAN is practically running a hotel for young ladies these days. Marsyl Stokes, her godchild, is visiting her, and Miss Betty Byrne recently arrived from New York to stay until the end of the week. Mrs. Henry Drummond-Wolff, mother of Miss Stokes, sailed on Saturday to return to her London home.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a gown of white lace with a finger tip length veil of tulle in three tiers, appliqued in lace and held in place with clusters of orange blossoms. She carried a large bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

Mrs. James Brown, of Wilmington, Del., her cousin, served as matron of honor, wearing a floor-length gown of dark green velvet. Mrs. Thomas A. Rivere was bridesmaid, attired in wine velvet. Both wore doll hats to match their gowns and carried large arm bouquets of yellow and bronze pompom chrysanthemums.

Nevin B. Noll, of Philadelphia, served as best man for his brother, and the ushers were Thomas A. Riviere, Frank J. Whitney, Elmer H. Whitney and Howard Ridgley.

A buffet supper for the wedding party and out-of-town guests followed the ceremony. It was held at the home of the bride's parents, which was decorated with autumn flowers for the occasion. Among guests from other cities were Mrs. Frank G. Whitney, of Knoxville, Tenn.; Mrs. Rose Butler and James Brown, of Wilmington, Del.

For her wedding costume, Mrs. Kiesler chose a teal blue crepe frock worn with accessories of a darker shade of blue, and a corage of orchids. Mr. Kiesler is president of the Rosslyn Steel and Cement Co. He and his bride are widely known in Washington and Virginia. St. Agnes Church in Arlington was the scene of their wedding.

Republican Women's Head Out

Mme. Cantacuzene Quits League Defers Action 1st Fall Meeting Held

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

The resignation of Mme. Cantacuzene as president of the League of Republican Women was presented yesterday at the first fall meeting of the organization at the Mayflower Hotel. The league voted to defer action on it until after her return from Europe the middle of this month, hoping she may reconsider, but her friends believe she will not continue in the presidency.

Mme. Cantacuzene became the head of the league a year ago last spring and, under her leadership, it opened its present headquarters, 1301 Seventeenth street, and has made progress and growth in membership. She will be hostess at a tea for the members and their guests following a card party at the Sulgrave Club October 25.

Other business at yesterday's meeting included reports of the meeting held last month in Chicago to organize the National Federation of Republican Women's Clubs. The Washington league was represented by Mrs. George Madden Grimes, second vice president, who was chairman of the committee which drew up the constitution and by-laws accepted by the federation, and Mrs. William H. Scott, local executive secretary, who was elected secretary of the national organization. About 200 clubs are represented in the federation.

Following the business session yesterday, there was an address by former Representative Campbell, who discussed the policies and expenditures of the present Administration.

There will be open house at the headquarters Wednesday afternoon, as last season, with officers of the league present to welcome members and their guests at tea.

Officers, in addition to Mme. Cantacuzene, are Mrs. Frank W. Mondell, first vice president, who presided; Mrs. Grimes, second vice president; Mrs. William S. Culbertson, third vice president; Mrs. William Doak, fourth vice president; Mrs. Warren J. Raines, fifth vice president; Mrs. Charles M. Lea, sixth vice president; Mrs. L. C. Kauffman, recording secretary; Miss Clara McQuown, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. Scott, corresponding secretary; Mrs. William Morton Grinnell, treasurer; Mrs. Hugh M. Southgate, assistant treasurer; Mrs. Mary Logan Tucker, acting chairman of entertainment, and Mrs. Edward E. Gann, chairman of the advisory committee.

STATE SOCIETIES are beginning their activities in earnest this month. The Massachusetts Society tonight will have its annual business meeting at the Wardman Park Hotel, at which Frank E. Hickey will preside, and the Georgia Society has announced its first dance for Saturday night at the Shoreham. The New York Society will have its first dance at the Shoreham October 28.

Reid on the Gospel Mission, where the society helps support a kindergarten teacher; Mrs. Maurice Emerson, on hospital aid and Mrs. Marie Deal, chairman of hostesses.

Madame Chairman

"HOW MANY stories have you sold? What are you writing now?"

These questions punctuated the conversation at two dinner parties held last night—the one, that at which Nell V. Smith, president of the Professional Writers' Club, entertained members at the Y. W. C. A., and the other, the first "family night dinner" held by the D. C. Branch of the League of American Pen Women at the Grafton Hotel. Mrs. Inez Sheldon Tyler, president of the Pen Women, presided at the latter.

The membership of the two organizations in many cases overlaps and Mrs. Smith and Mrs. Tyler are both officers in the National League of American Pen Women, which held its first fall board meeting yesterday at the Willard. Audrey Wurdemann, (Mrs. Joseph Auslander) the national president, outlined plans for the winter at the executive session.

Summer writing and success in selling the output were the chief topics of discussion as the writers met last night for the first time since vacation. Helen Orr Watson, one of the professional writers' group, is working toward a deadline on a new book which will tell the story of an army horse, as her "Chanco" did of an army pigeon.

THE WOMEN'S COMMITTEE of the Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, following the fashions which are reverting to the hoop skirt era, is planning to begin its activities with a straw ride Wednesday of next week. A concession to modern transportation will be trucks, which will start at 7 p. m. from Seventeenth and Constitution avenue, with Forrestville, Md., as the destination.

The committee this season is planning a course at the A. I. B. especially for women, dealing with personality. Members serving with Miss Royce in planning the program for the 100 women members of the Washington chapter include Arlene Allen, Marguerite Detterer, Alice Davidson, Anne Crawford, Eleanor Dankmeyer, Margaret Fisher, Elizabeth Rowzee, Constance Jones, Lee Morford, Katherine McCalmont, Alice Whitton, Sadye Weir, Naomi DeLozier, Lou Cornwell, Myrtle Lewis, Gertrude Wick and Virginia Birgfeld.

MRS. HEBER VOTAW, president of the Chevy Chase branch of the National League of American Pen Women, will address the branch today at its opening meeting at the Shoreham.

Polynesian 'Y' Worker Here From Canadian Session

Girl Descended From Maoris Is Visitor Knows English, but Not Own Language Has Viewpoint of British Women

Miss Amo Bennett, only member of the Polynesian race at the World's Council Conference of Y. W. C. A. recently held at Muskoka Lake, Canada, was here yesterday, the last of a group of foreign delegates to arrive for a visit.

Miss Bennett, whose ancestry combines Scotch and Irish blood with that of the Maori tribes of New Zealand, said she did not appreciate the fact that there was anything unusual in her background until she left New Zealand and found much interest in the tribes from which she is descended.

The Maori peole, who are believed to have reached New Zealand centuries ago from Egypt or Syria, had no written history. It was passed on by word of mouth, sons of tribal chiefs being set aside to learn it and pass it down from generation to generation. Women of the tribes learned it too and Miss Bennett remembers her grandmother reciting it to her when she was a child.

English Introduced Writing.

The people developed remarkable memories through this training in the preservation of their history and traditions, she said,

MISS AMO BENNETT.

but when the British entered the country a phonetic spelling for their words was devised so their history could be written and the old custom of memorizing it gradually was dropped. Although next year will mark only the centenary of the treaty under which the Maoris acknowledged the sovereignty of Great Britain, the native people have lost most of their manners and customs through intermarriage with the British and adoption of Western civilization.

Miss Bennett herself is an example of the change which has taken place. Although her dark eyes and hair and also her features are Polynesian, her speech and viewpoint are those of an Englishwoman. She attended English schools and does not know the Maori language.

Women of the old Maori tribes were gifted in the art of weaving and the men in fine carving, she said. These arts, like the other customs, were dying out until a few years ago when a movement was started to revive them. The Waikato Tribe is that which has retained the most of its native culture, she believes. There are now about 85,000 Maoris in New Zealand.

Miss Bennett is general secretary of the Y. W. C. A. in Whangarei and was one of several delegates from New Zealand to the world conference.

Local Conference Held

Yesterday marked culmination of the fall setting-up conference of the local Y. W. C. A. All members were invited to attend sessions held at the administration building, Seventeenth and I streets northwest, beginning at 3 o'clock. Mrs. Howard G. Nichols, a member of the board of directors and chairman of the arrangements committee for this part of the conference, presided. Others serving with her were Mrs. Ernest Danly, Mrs. William Adams Slade, Miss Mary Burnett, Mrs. Irving Ketchum and Miss Elizabeth Haney.

Miss Louise Danforth gave a report on the staff conference at Vacation Lodge, near Cherrydale, over the week-end, and Mrs. Slade led discussion on "Finding Ourselves," the theme of the conference.

Mrs. Arthur L. Brandon of the board of directors spoke on "Finding Ourselves in the World." Mrs. Danly followed with "Finding Ourselves in the Community" and Miss Jean Carr on "Finding Ourselves in the Association." A report on Constitution revision was read by Mrs. Fred E. Wright.

At 5:30 p. m. a reception was given honoring Miss Anna V. Rice of the national board of the Y. W. C. A., of New York, Mrs. William Lee Corbin, president of the Washington Association, and Miss Haney, new general secretary.

After the reception, dinner was served in Barker Hall, at which Mrs. Corbin presided. Those at the head table were Miss Rice, Mrs. Corbin, Mrs. Wright, Mrs. Nichols, Mrs. Danly, Mrs. Ketchum, Mrs. Slade, Miss Burnett and Miss Haney.

At 7:30 p. m. the evening meeting opened with devotionals led by Mrs. Wright. The Elizabeth Somers Glee Club sang under the direction of Miss Burnett, and Miss Rice, introduced by Mrs. Corbin, spoke on "The World and the Y. W. C. A."

Knitted Evening Gowns Set New Paris Fashion

Paris (U.P.).—Knitting needles are turning out such fashionable—and fanciful—garments these days that one wonders where to draw the dividing line between handknits, tweed materials and laces.

Anny Blatt's new knit evening gowns for the coming season are exemplary of this swing to haute couture, which master knitters have almost accomplished. Newest and most astounding is the combining of fleecy knitting with mousseline for evening wear. It's one of those ideas which needs seeing to believe.

If, say a chartreuse mousseline evening dress happens to get cigarette holes burned in its lower half, there's no need to worry. Knit the lower half of the skirt of chartreuse wool and silk yarn in a lace pattern; then poin it to the upper skirt half with a jagged joining line. Insert a bodice yoke of the same lacey knit.

Bedtime Story

By Thornton W. Burgess.

Off for Home
Who charts the migrant swallow's flight?
Who guides the birds that fly by night?
—The Old Naturalist.

The Old Naturalist stepped out into the open and gently tossed the pigeon up

"I am glad that it is a bright, clear morning," said the Old Naturalist, as he picked up the Homing Pigeon he had rescued the day before when it had been driven to cover by a Duck Hawk.

"Why? What difference would it make if it wasn't pleasant?" Sammy asked.

"Simply that you would have come here for nothing. If it were a wet day, or even if it threatened to be a wet one, I wouldn't start this bird on the way home," said the Old Naturalist.

"I don't see why," spoke up Sue.

"It would be bad flying weather," was the reply. "Very likely the bird wouldn't even start."

"Where are we going?" Sammy wanted to know, for the Old Naturalist was leaving the little clearing in which stood the sugar house in which he was spending the summer.

"To find another open place where I can let the bird go," was the reply.

"Why can't you let it go here?" Sue asked.

"I can, but the bird might not go. It has been fed and watered and rested here, and it might refuse to leave despite its longing for home. It is always best to take one of these Pigeons a short distance away from where it has been fed and cared for before releasing it," was the reply.

Presently they came to the edge of the woods. The Old Naturalist stepped out into the open and gently tossed the Pigeon up. Instantly it began to fly upward. Round and round it circled, getting higher all the time. Then suddenly it started off almost due east. For two or three minutes they watched it. Then it vanished into the distance beyond their range of vision.

"A safe journey to you, little traveler. You've gone in the right direction, but you've a long way to go," said the Old Naturalist.

"I hope that Duck Hawk doesn't see you," added Sue.

"And I hope that no boy or man with a gun tries to shoot our little friend," added the Old Naturalist.

"You don't really think that anyone would do a dreadful thing like that, do you?" cried Sammy.

The Old Naturalist shook his head sadly. "There are many who would if they had the chance," said he. "It happens all too often that these wonderful racing birds are shot when they happen to be flying low or are driven down by bad weather. There are many hazards on a long journey such as that bird is making, sudden storms, birds of prey, unscrupulous men and boys, exhaustion that brings them to earth to rest where cats or other hunters in fur may catch them. A racing Pigeon must have a heart as stout as its wings are strong to make these long flights"

"How do they carry messages in time of war?" Sue wanted to know.

"A very light metal capsule containing the message written on tissue paper is fastened to one leg and when released the bird flies back to its home loft where some one is waiting to receive the message. Homing Pigeons often have been successfuly used when there was no other possible way of getting important messages through. During the great World War some of the Pigeons became famous for their heroic flights over the battlefields," replied the Old Naturalist.

"I wish we could know if the little bird you just let go gets home safely, but of course we can't" said Sue, and sighed regretfully.

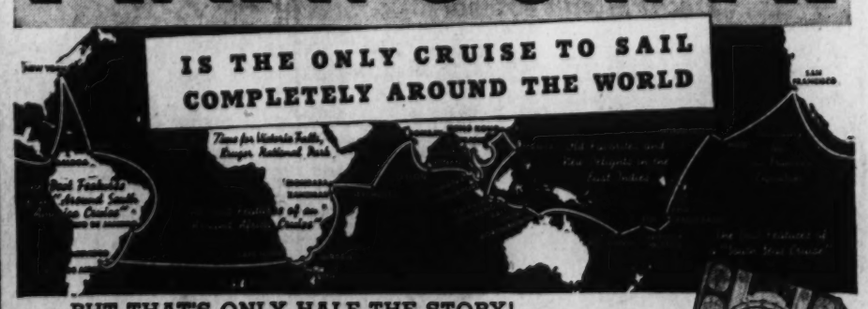

"We will," smiled the Old Naturalist. "I have written to the owner asking him to let us know if the bird reaches home and you can mail the letter yourself."

"Oh how lovely!" cried Sue.

The letter was mailed and in due time the word was received of the bird's arrival in good condition and there was a note of thanks for the care that had been given it.

Wife Slain, Veteran Held For Murder

Mother of 3 Killed
Engineer Denies Charge
Children Hear Shot

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 3.—Police of suburban Brookfield held James K. Matter, 42, an industrial engineer, on a murder charge today after his wife, Marguerite, was found shot through the heart in the bedroom of the family home.

Police Chief Thomas Mahoney, who swore out the murder warrant, said the 37-year-old mother of three children had been slain yesterday with her husband's Army rifle, a souvenir of his World War service. Matter has held high posts in several large national concerns.

The police official said Matter told him his wife had shot herself. Matter's daughter, Martha Gene, 12, corroborated his story, but later, Chief Mahoney said, changed her recital.

In her second version, Mahoney said, the girl related:

"I was in our bedroom with Jimmy and Bobby. I heard Mama scream and heard a shot. I ran into Mama's room. Daddy was cleaning his gun. Mother was on the bed, with a blanket up against her chest."

Mahoney said he learned the engineer had quarreled with his wife frequently and that he had been taking drugs for several weeks to ease the pain of a shattered heel, suffered in an accident.

Mahoney said he was informed Matter sent his wife to a physician Saturday night for the drug he had been using and became enraged when she returned empty handed. The physician had refused her the drug for fear Matter would become addicted to its use, the investigator reported.

Catholics Called To Join Crusade Against 'Isms

Hartford, Conn. Oct. 3 (AP).—Speakers called yesterday for a crusade in which 25,000,000 American Catholic laymen would take part to save the United States and the faith from "subversive influences," as part of the second day of the fourth catechetical congress.

"Fascism, communism and nazi-ism, that fatal trio, spring from a common root," Michael Williams, author and former editor of The Commonweal, warned delegates.

"Today we are witnessing a resurgence of paganism. The pagan gods ride again to make all men slaves, poisoning their souls with the vilest of poisons."

The Rt. Rev. Mgr. Joseph M. Corrigan, of Washington, D. C., rector of the Catholic University of America, said 25,000,000 Catholics in this Nation "must not be spineless when there is such an imperative need for patriotism."

Council Names Henry Maurer Greenbelt Mayor

The newly elected Greenbelt, Md., town council last night chose one of its members, Henry H. Maurer, as mayor. He defeated Sherrod E. East, who was named mayor pro-tem.

Maurer is serving his second term on the governing body of the Federal community. He was mayor pro-tem last year.

Members of the new council sworn in last night, besides East, were Mrs. Ruth Taylor, Allen D. Morrison and retiring Mayor Louis Bessemer. Maurer will be sworn in as mayor sometime this week by Brice Bowie, clerk to the Circuit Court, at Upper Marlboro.

Marvin C. Wofsey, resident of the community, asked the council to approve plans for construction of a nine-hole golf course within the town limits. The council deferred action, asking a written report on the proposal.

Wofsey said the Greenbelt Citizens Association had approved the project, which, he added, could be constructed at an estimated cost of $15,000. The proposed course would be open to Prince Georges County residents.

Unions Deny Slow-up Strike On U. S. Jobs

board from building up its field and professional staffs. The clerical work of the board is on a current basis."

He denied that NLRB workers' representatives are trying to dominate personnel relations. "All matters of mutual concern are and have been adjusted pursuant to procedures which are mutually satisfactory." The board has reason to know, he added, that the morale of its staff "is and always has been exceptionally high."

The board has had no case brought to its attention "which can conceivably be interpreted as an attempt by an employe to hide his inefficiency behind the shield of union discrimination," Witt declared.

He added that there is no C. I. O. union in the NLRB, and therefore the statement that C. I. O. organizers perform recruiting work during working hours is "necessarily without basis."

Independents Deny Charges

Next to speak out was Norman Mathias, president, National Labor Relations Board Union, an organization which is independent and unaffiliated. He said:

"We . . . brand as complete fabrication and defy anyone to prove that a slow-down strike, or any form of activity designed to lessen the output of the NLRB has ever been sponsored by this organization; that we, in any way, dominate personnel relations; that either C. I. O. organizers or any other union officials 'move about the agency attending to recruiting and handling complaints in office hours.'"

NLRB employes have "given their services willingly and unstintingly in the performance of their duties. We pride ourselves on the character of the relationship that has been built up between ourselves and the board," Mathias asserted.

The American Federation of Government Employes, affiliated with the A. F. of L., said that it had, some time ago, a lodge in the NLRB but the charter was "voluntarily surrendered." There may, at the moment, be a few A. F. G. E. members in the NLRB, but the number, if any, is negligible, it was stated by the national office, which added.

"The American Federation of Government Employes does not pass any judgment on the merit of these charges, but to correct any possible misapprehension, it wishes to place itself on record as unequivocally opposed to any such tactics. The national office does not resort to them and will not tolerate them on the parf of its subordinate lodges.

"The A. F. G. E. does not condone inefficiency and will not permit deliberate inefficiency on the part of its membership. The alleged slowing down of work in the Labor Department and the NLRB, attributed to the other organization, would appear to resemble the old-time I. W. W. tactic of 'striking on the job,' which has always been opposed by the American Federation of Labor and its affiliates.

"The A. F. G. E. has members in the Labor Department and the NLRB, but it is confident that those members have neither participated, nor have any intention of participating, in any activities that would interfere with the work of those agencies."

Girl Believed Fed To Alligators

Vice

Minnie May Gotthardt, of Sequin.

San Patricio officers were searching for Miss Gotthardt's body in the sand dunes near Ingleside, where Clifford Wheeler, colored, said he helped Ball bury her body.

Gerhardt said that both Miss Gotthardt and Hazel Brown, whose body was found in a shallow grave near Elmendorf, were expectant mothers.

Gerhardt also added the name of a California girl, Betty Wendell, to the list of women who disappeared from Ball's roadhouse.

Two Bexar County deputy sheriffs were in San Diego, Calif., today to return Ball's third wife, Dolores Goodman Ball, to San Antonio for questioning.

Mrs. Ball, in jail on a vagrancy charge, allegedly admitted to San Diego officers that she knew of the Gotthardt girl's death.

Gerhardt said the letters from the Gotthardt girl to Ball threatened to "break you and Dolores Goodman up if it's the last thing I do. I know I may be killed, but who cares?"

Another from her threatened to send Ball to jail. "Uncle Henry and I are going to take you to jail as soon as he gets here, and I am going to testify to plenty that I know," the faded letter said.

A note of sarcasm was found in a letter from Mrs. Ball to Minnie Gotthardt. The letter dated August 16, 1936, was written from Villa Acuna, Mex. "Hello Minnie," it read. "We are celebrating our wedding in Mexico. You can stay there if you want, but don't let me catch you there." It was signed "Dolores."

Cain said his eye-witness to the alligator feeding said that the incident occurred in 1932. The alligators still were in the pit behind the roadhouse known as "Joe's Place" when Ball committed suicide when questioned regarding the disappearance of his second wife, Nell Ball.

Mead Proposes A CCC for Men Over 45

A permanent Federal agency along the lines of the CCC to provide work for men over 45 years of age was proposed yesterday by Representative Mead (Democrat) of New York, senatorial nominee.

"Age discrimination is practiced by the Government as well as by private enterprise," Mead said. As a member of Congress my attention has been repeatedly drawn to instances, where the Government, through specifications of the Civil Service Commission and departmental regulations, has been patently discriminatory in requirements in respect to age."

As additional phases of the program Mead suggested legislation to liberalize civil service requirements as well as compensation laws to encourage employment of older workers in public and private agencies, and to extend benefits of the social security act to afford protection to workers not covered by existing law.

Cancer Council Opens 4-Phase Program Here

Dr. Compton's report was made at a closed session of the council, with the announcement that details of the new cancer weapon will be given by Dr. Lawrence himself to the public.

"Appraisal" Needed

The study to be launched immediately by the Public Health Service of types of cancer treatment —X-ray, radium and surgery— was prompted, officials said, by "tremendously increased public interest in the cancer problem and the widespread efforts of various organizations, both public and private, in stimulating and developing programs of cancer control."

"There is obviously a very great need for the critical appraisal of these cancer control programs, and more particularly those elements which seem to receive the greatest emphasis from the standpoint of both public education and public expenditures," Dr. Ludvig Hektoen, executive director of the National Advisory Cancer Council, commented on the study.

Members of the council watched the first shovelful of earth lifted from the site of the National Cancer Institution near Bethesda as Mrs. Luke Wilson, donor of the land, sat in the cab of a giant steam shovel and pressed a lever which scooped up the earth and transferred it to a waiting truck.

15 Extra Acres Given

The new building will be located on the crest of a hill west of the Rockville pike, near Cedar lane. Mrs. Wilson said she had given an additional 15 acres of property near the site of the new building, which adjoins the buildings of the National Institute of Health, for quarter of officers of the Cancer Institute.

Members of the council participating in the ceremony included Dr. Thomas Parran, surgeon general, United States Public Health Service; Dr. James Ewing, director, Memorial Hospital, New York; Dr. Francis Carter Wood, director, Crocker Institute of Cancer Research, Columbia University; Dr. Clarence C. Little, director of the American Society for the Control of Cancer; Dr. Arthur H. Compton, of the University of Chicago; Dr. James B. Conant, president of Harvard University, and Dr. Ludvig Kektoen.

The regulations for loan of the Government-owned radium by the Cancer Institute include stringent rules that persons who will handle the radium must have the professional qualifications set by the American Board of Radiology.

Preferences Stated

In addition, hospitals and clinics to which loans are made must keep complete treatment records and follow-up studies of patients and have reports available for the Cancer Institute at all times. The institute, in considering applications, may designate staff members to investigate the applying hospital or clinic. Preference will be given to applicants approved by State boards of health or cancer commissions.

Reports on the training of cancer specialists and on work in the field of genetics, as related to cancer, were presented by Dr. James Ewing and by Dr. Clarence C. Little.

The council voted to meet again January 3, 1939, at which time it is expected several grants-in-aid to hospitals and research institutions for cancer study will be made. Dr. Lawrence's cyclotron was developed during the past year under a $30,000 grant-in-aid from the Advisory Council.

SCHOOL DAYS: Young Franklin Roosevelt's second year at the University of Virginia's law school turns out a little stiffer than expected. He attends 16 lectures a week. This year the emphasis is on Constitutional Law, with six lectures every week; and this means (theoretically, at least) 12 hours of home work on the Constitution.

42 hours a week

Besides, he listens to (and maybe recites on) Equity three times a week; Evidence twice a week; Civil Procedure twice a week, and Real Property three times a week. Since each lecture hour is supposed to involve two hours of study, that means a 48-hour week. But maybe a bright boy can trim that a little.

CAPITAL CAVIAR: Our military people have had quite definite intimations that even Hitler's unpurged generals might have balked at war . . . Via army wig-wag . . . Alongside the invasion of the Capital by peace propagandists, the invasion by the British in 1812, the Confederate menace in 1861-62 and the Bonus Army in 1932 were mere trifles . . . They're tougher than barb wire . . . So warlike has the atmosphere been that 94 planes flew over Washington in formation and 40 tanks lumbered through the streets without creating much stir.

One result of Gen. Westover's tragic crash may be less flying for the older officers of the Air Corps . . .

They feel it's good for flyers' morale to be commanded by colonels and generals who can handle a plane. But a fiftyish colonel or general distraught by executive burdens can't concentrate on his controls as well as a downy-cheeked lieutenant.

Fifty per cent extra flying pay is a great temptation for a $4,000 a year colonel worried about his family's bills. But his flying may soon be limited to twin-motor planes with dual controls and a co-pilot.

Some Americans streaming home from Germany report it's an open scandal there that Nazi leaders are waxing fat and rich from graft in the confiscation of property belonging to victimized Germans . . . Honest Germans are shocked and indignant; they denounce the sticky-fingered little fuehrers as much as they dare.

But the graft isn't enough to go around; schemes simmer for confiscation of dissident Protestant and Catholic church property next.

"—a Briton stops a war"

I've seen how a Briton can stop a war, with my own eyes . . . Back in 1919 I was on a diplomatic train between Vienna and Warsaw, when we ran slap-bang into a little private war between Czechs and Poles one night, north of Brunn. Bullets spattered against the train. An American general (Medal of Honor man) climbed out without puttees, his tunic unbuttoned . . . A brave officer, he was flabbergasted. Could we go on?

* * * *

Ten minutes later a British general, who had dressed as if for parade, climbed out into the murky no-man's-land . . . The Polish and Czech officers were all for backing our train up so the informal warfare could go on. . . . But the Briton said something terse about the British empire, diplomatic immunity, the Supreme Interallied Council and intimated that a Briton's sleeping compartment is his castle. The Czechs and Poles declared an armistice, the train rolled on, and we all went back to bed. The Briton was the last one undressed.

OF THEE I SING: Of blind Senator Gore, whom you're apt to run into in almost any Cabinet member's anteroom, guided by a youth, keeping his finger on the pulse . . . Of the handkerchief Mrs. Roosevelt keeps tucked in her dress belt, fiddling shyly with it as she speaks . . . Of the Indian summer which drove hot-blooded officials back to lightweight clothes.

Chevy Chase Marijuana Sale Scored

Special Study Ordered
Boulevard Attacked
Child Deaths Feared
Safety Group Named

Reported sale of marihuana to Chevy Chase school children was ordered studied by a special committee named at a meeting last night of the Forest Hill Citizens Association, meeting at the Ben Murch School, Thirty-sixth and Ellicot streets northwest. Maj. C. M. Exley was appointed to head the inquiry.

The association adopted a strongly-worded resolution censuring the Board of Education "for allowing the Park and Planning Commission to run the projected Fort Drive boulevard within 8 feet of Murch School."

Mrs. Leslie Wright, president of the association, described the plan as "absolutely criminal," predicting that: "we will probably have one child a year killed on that drive."

A special traffic safety committee, headed by Col. Lawrence Crawford, chairman of a similar group on the Board of Trade, was authorized to co-operate with the commissioners in all feasible steps to reduce the District's accident toll.

Manor Park

The District Commissioners were asked last night by the Manor Park Citizens Association, meeting at Whittier School, to provide $80,000 for a girls' gymnasium at Calvin Coolidge School. The group asked also for a traffic light at Georgia avenue and Kennedy streets northwest and for a policeman to direct traffic at Thirteenth and Kennedy streets northwest.

A resolution was adopted condemning the Public Utilities Commission and the Capital Transit Company for bus service from Third and Sheridan streets northwest. The resolution said the commission and the company failed to carry out promises made when street car service was discontinued.

George A. Corbin was re-elected president and E. H. Pullman was named first vice president. Other officers elected were: Mrs. Arthur Kriemelmeyer, second vice president; George R. Kieferle, recording secretary; Thomas Reidy, corresponding secretary, and T. W. Buckley, treasurer. Corbin and Henry Seaquist were named delegates to the federation.

Georgetown Progressive

A recommendation that only persons who have lived in the District 10 years or more be considered for the post of District Commissioner, was indorsed last night by the Georgetown Progressive Citizens' Association, at the Curtis School.

Officials explained the resolution was not directed against any of the present commissioners.

Takoma Citizens

The District Commissioners were requested to press for an $80,000 appropriation for a girls' gymnasium in the Calvin Coolidge High School, now under construction at Fifth and Sheridan streets northwest, in a resolution adopted last night by the Takoma Citizens Association. The meeting was held in the auditorium of Takoma Park Elementary School.

The association also went on record in favor of extension of the rush hour one-way traffic zone on Thirteenth street northwest from Spring road to Colorado avenue.

In another resolution P. E. Anderson, chairman of the public utilities committee, was instructed to appear before the Public Utilities Commission at a hearing scheduled for October 12, to support the projected cross-town bus service from Wisconsin avenue to Bladensburg road.

Metropolis View

Vincent Boudren was installed as president of the Metropolitan View Citizens Association, meeting at the Crosby Noyes School. Other new officers inducted were John Dirks, vice president; Mrs. C. C. Walden, treasurer; Mrs. Richard Purcell, secretary.

Delegates elected to the Federation of Citizens Associations were Dirks and Benjamin Bolinger. Delegates elected to the Northeast Conference of Citizens Associations were George Miller, past president, and George Alexander.

Kenilworth

A demand that public hearings be held on all proposed changes in traffic regulations was voiced last night by the Kenilworth Citizens Association.

Charles Maize, president, left his chair and sponsored the traffic resolution from the floor. Willard A. Driggers, chairman of the association's committee on traffic, recommended that Lieut. Franklin M. Kreml, traffic expert, be invited to Washington again to study the traffic situation.

Bladensburg Road

Vincent A. Osterman, town commissioner of Bladensburg, last night urged the sewer systems of Montgomery County and the District be linked together to cut down pollution in the Eastern Branch, in a meeting of the Bladensburg Road Citizens' Association.

New Canon Is Elected At Cathedral

The Rev. Bradner Here Comes From Bay State Married, 3 Children

The Rev. William Murray Bradner has been elected canon precentor and a member of the chapter of Washington Cathedral to succeed the late Rev. William L. DeVries, the Very Rev. Noble C. Powell, dean of the cathedral, announced yesterday. The Rev. Mr. Bradner has been rector of Grace Church, Medford, Mass., for seven years.

Canon Bradner, nominated to his post several months ago by the Right Rev. James E. Freeman, D. D., Bishop of Washington and president of the cathedral chapter, already has entered on his duties. He was introduced to the congregation Sunday from the chancel.

Has Charge of Wofship

He will have charge of the department of worship, which includes preparing orders for religious services, supervision of cathedral music and other matters concerned with the cathedral as a center of public worship. He also will assist Dr. Powell as warden of the College of Preachers where a conference for clergy is being held this week on "Preaching and the Pastoral Office," under leadership of the Right Rev. Clinton S. Quin, D. D., Bishop of Texas.

Canon Bradner first attracted attention of Bishop Freeman and other officers of the Cathedral when he was in residence as a fellow of the College of Preachers last year. A native of New York City, he is 38 and was graduated from Yale with a degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1922. After attending General Theological Seminary for two years, he was graduated "cum laude" from the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Mass., in 1925.

His career in the Episcopal Church began that same year when he was ordained to the Diaconate at Summit, N. J., by the late Right Rev. Edwin S. Lines, Bishop of Newark. He was advanced to the priesthood in LaGrande, Oreg., in 1926, by the Right Rev. William P. Remington, D. D., missionary bishop of eastern Oregon. After serving as a lay reader at Pompton Lakes, Butler and Ringwood, N. J., and also in St. Martin's Parish, Providence, R. I., Canon Bradner spent three years in rural missionary work in eastern Oregon where he ministered to two communities every Sunday and gave pastoral assistance in five others, one of the towns being 85 miles distant from Cove, where he was stationed.

At Medford Seven Years

He was executive secretary of the department of religious education in the Diocese of Massachusetts from 1928 to 1931 when he was called to be rector of Grace Church in Medford which now has more than 600 communicants. In his ministry in Massachusetts, he served as chairman of the Diocesan Commission on Evangelism and Young People's Work, as a member of the National Child Study Commission and the National Lenten Offering Committee, a member of the Diocesan Department on Boys' Work and chaplain for three years of the Concord Provincial Conference.

Canon Bradner was married in 1924 to Miss Louise Davis Reynolds, of Providence, R. I., and they have three children—William Murray, jr., 12; Helen Angell, 10, and Robert Bradner, 6. Canon and Mrs. Bradner and the children have taken up their residence at 3515 Woodley road, opposite the Cathedral Grounds.

The Cathedral staff is welcoming the new canon precentor this week just as it says farewell to the Rev. Everett H. Jones, canon and chancellor, who is leaving Mount Saint Alban Saturday for San Antonio, Tex., where he has accepted the rectorship of St. Mark's Church, the largest parish in the Diocese of West Texas.

Husbands Are Like Street Cars In Salmon's Life, Says Curator

Whether a lady salmon is fickle or merely a resigned philosopher when she puts up no resistance to the man salmon who has just vanquished her nest-defending mate and comes to claim her for his own still remains a mystery.

That moot point is just about the only one concerning the courtship and nest-building talents of salmon, however, that is not cleared up in the report by Dr. Leonard P. Schultz which was made public yesterday by the Smithsonian Institution.

In the institution's annual report the Smithsonian's curator of fishes reveals many hitherto unknown facts about the home life of salmon.

He found that in nest building the female does practically all the work, demonstrating an instinctive knowledge of hydraulics that only an engineer can appreciate. While the madame toils, flexing her tail vigorously time after time to scoop out a nest on the bottom, her mate just hovers idly by.

In defending the nest, the female acts as a sort of goal tender while the male stands guard in all directions. If her mate succeeds in repelling a would-be home wrecker, Mrs. Salmon seems content. If he loses and the conquering interloper takes possession of the nest and chatelaine, that seems to be all right with her, too, Dr. Schultz reported.

Americans Irreverent, Parley Told

Rev. Mr. Snyder Speaks
Brotherhood Meets
Worship Held Lethargic

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, Oct. 3.—Lack of reverence in America and lethargic worship was denounced today at the opening of the eleventh biennial convention of the Unitde Lutheran Church in America by the Rev. Howard E. Snyder, of Washington.

The pastor of the Atonement Lutheran Church declared:

"It is man's first duty to worship the being who created him. Few in America today seem to realize this. They have not the intent nor the impulse to do anything about worship.

"They answer you with baby talk when you speak to them of God, handing up feeble excuses completely lacking in sense.

"We need a spirit of humility. It is badly lacking in many Protestant churches where men go among one another back-slapping. They speak of God as though he were a fraternity brother and they knew all the grips and handshakes."

The meeting today preceded the convention of the United Lutheran Church, for which more than 1,000 clergymen and laymen are expected to attend the opening meeting Wednesday.

The brotherhood adopted tonight a budget of $11,200 for administration expenses during the next biennium.

Earle W. Bader, of Bethlehem, Pa., executive secretary of the brotherhood, reported 43,000 members in 1,802 brotherhoods. He said 142 new locals and three synodical brotherhoods were organized during the biennium, and another is to be formed at Ann Arbor, Mich, October 30.

J. Milton Deck, of Philadelphia, president of the brotherhood, announced the appointment of the Rev. Dr. Amos J. Traver, of Frederick, as editor of Lutheran Men, the monthly brotherhood magazine.

Wage Dispute May Eliminate Barber-Shop Manicurist

Owners Oppose $18 Minimum Salary
Girls Denied Right to Rent Space
Beauty Parlors Exempt From Ruling

Manicurists employed in barber shops will probably have to seek employment elsewhere following an order yesterday by the Board of Cosmetology prohibiting their renting space in shops.

Barbers have complained to the board, as well as to the minimum wage board, that they are unable to guarantee manicurists $18 per week as required by the wage law.

Their only way out, they figured, would be to rent space in their shop to the manicurist. This would make the manicurist her own employer and not be entitled to a minimum wage.

Men, apparently in a hurry when having a haircut or shave, want their manicures while on the barber's chair.

Now, the manicurist could not possibly rent enough space in the barber shop to take her from chair to chair. If she did, the barbers themselves would be occupying her space, and then she could, in turn, charge them rent.

So, the only thing to do is to refuse to permit barbers to rent space to manicurists.

Injuries in Fall From Roof Fatal To J. H. Roberts

John H. Roberts, 70, 3028 R street northwest, died in Georgetown University Hospital yesterday after he had fallen from the roof of his home to a passageway 30 feet below. He climbed to the roof to do some repair work.

Mr. Roberts, who was born in Tuckahoe, N. Y., of Welsh arentage, celebrated his seventieth birthday Saturday.

He came to Washington in 1904. He was employed as a tool designer at the Washington Navy Yard until his retirement five or six years ago.

He leaves his wife, a son, William M. Roberts, of Arlington, Va., and a brother, William Roberts, of Yonkers, N. Y.

He was a member of the Lebanon Lodge of Masons. Funeral services will be held Thursday at the Martin W. Hysong undertaking parlors. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

Robbers Get $100 In Takoma Park Store Holdup

Two black-faced robbers last night flourished weapons before three employes of the Washington Mission College grocery store in Takoma Park, Md., and escaped with a loot of approximately $100.

A man appearing to be about 35 years old carried "either a shotgun or rifle," according to Miss Carlea Mitts, 17, Missionary College student and part-time clerk at the store, while she thought the younger man concealed a revolver in his pocket. White skin showed through a dusky coating on the robbers' faces, she said.

General Lear Will Command Canal Sector

The War Department yesterday ordered Maj. Gen. Ben Lear, commander of the First Cavalry Division, Fort Bliss, Tex., to assume command of the Pacific sector, Panama Canal Department, relieving Brig. Gen. Frederick H. Smith, who will go to Fort Monroe, Va., to head the Third Coast Artillery District and the Cost Artillery School.

Brig. Gen. Henry T. Burgin, now in charge of harbor defenses at San Francisco, has been assigned to command of the Ninth Coast Artillery, with headquarters at San Francisco. He succeeds Brig. Gen. Joseph P. Tracy, who will retire October 31.

Maj. Gen. William H. Wilson, now commanding the First Coast Artillery District, Boston, will head the First Corps Area, Boston, relieving Maj. Gen. Fox Conner, retired last week. Command of the First Coast Artillery District will be taken by Brig. Gen. Edmund L. Daley, division engineer, New York City.

Closer Check On Venereal Cases Sought

Treatments Missed
Others May Be Cured
Discussion Today

District health officials yesterday launched a program designed to prevent venereal disease patients from "missing" treatments at local clinics and at the same time to protect them from "too much" treatment.

Health Officer George C. Ruhland will meet superintendents of all local hospitals, clinic supervisors and representatives of the United States Public Health Service in the District Building board room at 10:30 a. m. today.

Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, assistant health officer, said yesterday some patients have received as many as 100 inoculations in the treatment of syphilis "and don't know whether they are cured or not."

In other instances some patients have reported for "one or two" treatments and have never returned for further care. It is proposed, he said, to have a more adequate checking system on the number of treatments, progress made by the patients, and in general a better follow-up method of those afflicted with a venereal disease.

Dr. Seckinger pointed out the State of Ohio has inaugurated a plan whereby each patient has a card, which is punched each time he receives treatment. At the same time, the attending physician records the treatment and the date.

The District now has some $40.000 for venereal disease control. Of this, $16.000 was supplied by the Federal Government.

Dr. Seckinger said the Health Department would probably ask cooperation from private physicians.

German Embassy Picketing Banned

Police Superintendent Ernest W. Brown yesterday refused to grant a permit to picket the German Embassy to the Washigton branch of the American League for Peace and Democracy.

The local branch of the league discussed, at a meeting last night in the Raleigh Hotel, means for expressing "the indignation of the American people at the invasion of a sister democracy, Czechoslovakia," as well as plans to boycott aggressor nations.

Yom Kippur Starts Today At Sundown

Day of Atonement
Jews Will Fast
Ends Tomorrow
Services Scheduled

The most solemn day in the Jewish calendar, the Day of Atonement, will be ushered in tonight at sundown with the haunting strains of the Kol Nidre, musical prelude to 24 hours of fasting and prayer.

Jews in Washington and throughout the world will flock to synagogues to express repentance for past sins, to rededicate themselves for the future and to offer prayers for the oppressed in every land.

According to the tradition that has survived more than 2,000 years, man must reconcile himself with his fellow man before the services of Yom Kippur (Day of Atonement), actually begin. Then, in the evening prayer, he asks forgiveness or unfulfilled resolutions he has made in the past year toward God and toward himself.

Prayer Starts Service

Tomorrow's services, which begin in some orthodox synagogues as early as 6 a. m., include the morning prayer; readings from the Torah; a memorial service for the dead; followed by the Mussaf, or additional service; the late afternoon service, and, finally, the Neilah, or closing prayers, which are brought to an end just after sundown with a single blast from the ram's horn to indicate the completion of the New Year ceremonies that began 10 days ago.

At Washington Hebrew Congregation, Rabbis Abram Simon and Norman Gerstenfeld will officiate. Tonight's services begin at 7:30; tomorrow's, at 10 a. m. for children and 10:30 for adults. The memorial service will be held at 4:30 p. m. Dr. Simon will speak tomorrow on "Scapegoat and Scapegrace." An overflow service in the vestry rooms of the temple, at 822 Eighth street northwest, will be conducted by Rabbis Isadore Breslau and Paul Richman.

Rabbi Loeb to Speak

Rabbi J. T. Loeb will speak tonight and tomorrow at Southeast Hebrew Congregation, 417 Ninth street southeast, on "The Call for Repentance" and "The Covenant of God and Fulfillment of Treaties Among Men." Services commence at 5:45 this evening

"From the Depths" will be Rabbi Solomon Metz's topic this evening at Adas Israel Synagogue, Sixth and I streets northwest, where services begin at 5. Tomorrow he will talk on "The Meaning of Atonement." Morning worship begins at 7.

Rabbi Harry Silverstone will discuss "The Source of Jewish Inspiration" tonight at Tifereth Israel Congregation, 1401 Euclid street northwest, and "Sacred Memories" tomorrow. Services are at 5 p. m. and 8:30 a. m., respectively.

"Do we Remember the Living in the Time of Memorial for the Dead?" will be the question put by Rabbi M. H. Levinson at Beth Sholom, Eighth and Shepherd streets northwest. Rabbi Joshua Klavan will conduct services at Talmud Torah, 467 E street southwest, where prayers will begin at 5 tonight and 6 a. m. tomorrow. At Ohev Sholom, Fifth and I streets northwest, Rabbi Zemach Green will officiate tonight at 6:15 and tomorrow at 6:30 a. m. Other services will be held at B'Nai Israel, Ezras Israel, Beth El, Kesher Israel, Volner Anchi Svart and Har Zion.

Chicago Roars Welcome to Conquering Cubs

Sports | The Washington Post | Sports

Jim Meade Breaks Ankle, Lost to Maryland Eleven

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

En route to Chicago, Oct. 3.—I may be as wrong as the guy who said they can't put you in jail for that but I am entertaining the idea that the 1939 World Series will be short—and for the American League—sweet. There's another train rolling toward Chicago tonight, from New York, and on it is a team called the Yankees. As Brutus might have said, the Yankees are not going to Chicago to praise the Cubs.

POVICH.

There's no sense denying that this department is a staunch old American Leaguer given to sniffing skeptically at National League baseball. To the hysterical citizens of Chicago, to friends of Gabby Hartnett and to the disappointed burghers of Pittsburgh, the 1938 Cubs may be a potent package. But despite all attempts to regard the Cubs circumspectly, my conviction is that against the Yankees they'll be just another National League ball team.

And by this time it is fairly well established that a National League ball team in a World Series against the Yankees should count on the losers' share of the series. I have at hand a mess of figures to throw into the debate, if any. In eight World Series since 1921 the Yankees triumphed in seven. In 42 games played they won 31. In exactly four of the eight series, the National League entry failed to win a game. The series background offers nothing encouraging to the Cubs.

Cubs Flopped, Too!

The Cubs themselves have been a party to the awful shellacking National League pennant winners have taken from American League champions. In 1929 the Athletics came up with ten runs in the eighth inning of the final game to end the series four games to one. In 1932, the Yanks slapped the Cubs down in four straight. In 1935, against the Tigers, the Cubs did better. They won two games. They also won the distinction of being the first National League club to lose a World Series to the Tigers who never were able to win one.

But this 1938 Cub team is different, certain folks would have you believe. It has courage, it has pitching and it has Gabby Hartnett. It won't fold, they say, pointing to that late-season surge of 21 wins out of 25 games when all seemed hopeless. But we seem to remember that in 1936 under similar black prospects the Cubs put on a 21-game winning streak and landed in the series, only to collapse before the Tigers after winning the first game by a shutout.

And National League fans are hardly entitled to count heavily on the fact that the Yankees nave been loafing in recent weeks. If memory serves, the Yankees loafed even more in the final weeks of 1936 when they won the pennant by 19 games and polished off the Giants in six. And in 1937 they won by 17½ games and licked the Giants in five. Like the Cubs of 1938, the Giants were supposed to be a "hot" team still imbued with the spirit of a frenzied pennant fight, but their vigor vanished when the Yankees started trooping to bat.

Beating the Yankees is no small order as we've been meaning to say for the last 10 minutes. The pitcher who goes to the mound with that idea in view is under a terrific strain and, if he is not abysmally dumb, he knows it. He knows that there isn't a spot in that Yankee batting order where he can ease up. If he gets rid of Crosetti and Rolfe there's always DiMaggio. And if it's not DiMaggio it may be Gehrig or Dickey.

There's Mr. Gordon

Then if the pitcher permits himself to ease up against the lower end of the batting order, Mr. George Selkirk or Mr. Joe Gordon are apt to knock the ball out of the lot. They may not be the hitters of the Rolfe, DiMaggio, Gehrig, Dickey type, but Selkirk and Gordon will pound the ears off anything but excellent pitching.

The pitcher who does beat the Yankees has turned in an enormous job. He has been pitching superb baseball under what we were saying is a terrific strain. If you don't believe the man who faces the Yankees is under a strain, check up on the wild pitches that occur against the New York club. It's a safe bet that twice as many wild pitches are unleashed against the Yanks as against any other club in the league.

There's an elderly silver-haired gentleman on this special car and he has given 50 years of his life to baseball. He was saying not an hour ago that he'd be surprised if the Cubs lasted more than five games.

"They don't figure," said Clark Griffith. "This Yankee team may be the greatest ball club of all time. It has everything, power, pitching, defense and speed. The Cubs don't look like a solid ball club to me.

"Of course, I'm prejudiced in the matter, being an American Leaguer, but I'm trying to give the Cubs the benefit of every doubt. But to beat the Yankees a team must overpower 'em. They don't have that kind of power on the Cubs. You'd have to string along with the Yankee power even if the Yankees didn't have pitching, which they happen to have."

Grid Star May Be Out For Season

Injured Saturday
Clean Break Shown
Weidinger Also Hurt
Shake-Up Threatened

By Jack Munhall.

Maryland University's reamining hopes for a successful football campaign went glimmering yesterday when Jim Meade, regular left halfback and the team's most valueable player, was lost for at least a month and possibly for the season when X-rays revealed the main bone in his right ankle to be broken.

The big, pile-driving senior, whose exploits during the last three seasons have won him All-District honors twice and All-Southern conference selection last season, injured his ankle in the fourth quarter of the Penn State game Saturday. At the time the extent of his injury was not known and he ran several more plays before Coach Frank Dobson replaced him.

When the team arrived in Washington yesterday Meade was rushed to the offices of Doc Larkin, Maryland's team physician, and the X-rays told the story. They showed a clean break in the main bone of Meade's ankle

Series of Injuries

This accident is the latest in an amazing series of misfortunes that has plagued the Terps, who were expecting a season that would duplicate the great record of last year. First Charlie Weidinger, regular quarter back and an excellent passer, dropped out of the line-up with a bad shoulder. Then Rip Hewitt, capable utility back, then Francis Beamer, regular end, and then Pershing Mondorff. One by one they were relegated to the sidelines with various injuries.

JIM MEADE,

Mondorff, like Meade, was injured Saturday. An old cut over his left eye was reopened and he is not expected to be ready to play against Syracuse, Maryland's game for Saturday. Hewitt worked out yesterday and may be ready, but Beamer is doubtful.

On top of all that, Coach Dobson, disgusted with the weak line play that has led to successive losses to Richmond and Penn State, yesterday announced a big shakeup. Demoted from the varsity to the junior varsity were Guards Arthur Rudy and John DeArmi and Tackle Bill Krause. Dobson then selected four other guards with whom he plans to devote much practice and develop them sufficiently to plug the gaps in his line. This quartet includes Ed Lloyd, George Lawrence, George Geinger and Abe Cohen.

Three Others Happy

In the camps of the District's other three major elevens there was a note of happiness that contrasted sharply with the gloom that has settled over College Park. Catholic University, George Washington and Georgetown, all victorious over the weekend, plunged into arduous training with renewed vigor although the new week brings stronger opposition.

The Cardinals, whose surprisingly decisive victory over St. Bonaventure was the most important triumph by a local school, draws probably its toughest assignment of the season in a lengthy train ride and an intersectional battle wint Gus Dorais' Detroit Titans Friday night.

Bashful, Bill?—Bill Lee (left), ace Cub hurler, had better not be as bashful as he appears to be when he faces the New York Yanks in the World Series, probably in the first game. Bill is shown as he was called upon to speak before a huge crowd honoring the team at City Hall yesterday. But Bill told 'em he'll be in there pitching in the series. Center—Hartnett grins as city honors him—chewing his cigar and grinning broadly. Gabby Hartnett, manager of the pennant-winning Cubs, is shown atop a car as a huge parade staged in honor of the Bruins got under way. "We'll beat those Yanks"—That's what Diz Dean, hurler, who won one of those crucial games against the Pirates, told Chicago Cub fans as the city turned out by thousands to honor the National League pennant winners. Dean is shown as he faced the crowd at City Hall.

Lee May Be Cubs' Choice

Dean Not in Opener

By George Kirksey,

United Press Sports Writer.

Chicago, Oct. 3.—William Crutcher Lee, jr., the soft-spoken Louisianian with the motion picture profile, tonight seemed certain to draw the toughest assignment in baseball—the job of pitching the opening world series game for the Chicago Cubs against the murderous New York Yankees at Wgirley Field Wednesday.

Gabby Hartnett, the Cubs' happy warrior, won't announce his official selection until tomorrow, but every indication was that Lee, who won 22 games to lead the majors, will pitch the opener and Clay Bryant, the curly-haired Alabama boy, will work the second game for the Cubs. Dizzy Dean positively will not pitch the opener, the Cubs management said.

Hartnett expects Red Ruffing to be Joe McCarthy's choice to pitch the opener for the Yankees. Hartnett's reason for not announcing his pitcher is that he wants to give his starter one day less of worry.

Arch McDonald Will Write His Slant On World Series Exclusively for The Post

In the press boxes at Wrigley Field and Yankee Stadium, a large gentleman by the name of Arch McDonald will wedge his way into a choice seat and The Washington Post will have one more official observer at the 1938 World Series.

Arch McDonald, the glib fellow of radio fame who predicted an attack of Buc fever for the Pirates and the pennant for the Cubs, has joined The Post's reportorial staff for the series.

McDonald will write a daily article on the series for The Post. A reformed but not completely reformed-hillbilly from Arkansas, McDonald will not "expert" on the World Series. He will write no technical articles. He won't go in for the heavy stuff. What Arch will do is let his twinkling eyes scan the series proceedings and report the games from the McDonald angle, which means he'll try to dig up a laugh. In any event he'll be writing with his tongue in his cheek.

ARCH McDONALD.

Shirley Povich, The Post's baseball writer who is the peer of any writer on the national game, will write the main story of each game of the series, and will give expert analysis of the game's highlights in his daily column, This Morning.

In addition, Richards Vidmer, of the Herald Tribune, the complete sports facilities of the Associated Press, the United Press, the Herald Tribune Service and Wirephoto, will give Post readers a complete story of each contest.

For complete stories, sidelights, dressing room tales, play-by-play, features, special writers and spot action photos, more than ever this year it will be The Post for the World Series.

Central Plays Today

A potentially powerful Central High School football squad will make its first start in the interhigh gridiron season today against Western on the Red Raiders' field. The game will start at 3:30.

Coach Hardy Pearce, of the Mount Pleasant school, will put 11 men on the field, only 2 of whom were regulars in 1937, Shannon Cramer, a tackle, and Buch Schlager, captain and guard. In contrast, Western boasts eight veterans in the line and backfield.

It will be Western's initial test of the season, however, and Central already has played one game, a 6-6 deadlock with Gonzaga. Western was scheduled to play the Gonzagans last week-end, but the tilt was postponed for a month because of schedule differences.

According to Coach Pearce, Central will be well on the way to its former gridiron glory if it gets past the Western hazard today. He considers the Raiders the only real competition in the series, Eastern being forced to completely revamp its squad after taking the crown with ease last season.

Atlanta Wins Dixie Pennant

Beaumont, Tex., Oct. 3 (U.P.).—Atlanta shut out Beaumont, 7 to 0, today to win the fourth game of the Dixie series and the pennant.

Credit for the victory went to Moon, Atlanta hurler, who held Beaumont to three safe blows.

Nova Kayoes Gunnar Barlund; Climbs in Fistic Ladder

By Jack Cuddy.

New York, Oct. 3.—Lou Nova, bronzed Californian, rose from the floor tonight to smash into the heavyweight picture with a seventh-round technical knockout victory over Gunnar Barlund, of Finland, the National Boxing Association's No. 2 heavyweight challenger.

More than 8,000 fans in Madison Square Garden saw Referee Arthur Donovan halt the bout at 1:42 of the seventh session in their scheduled 15-round bout because Barlund was bleeding so badly from a gash over his left eye.

Barlund, the sharp-punching Finn who had stopped Buddy Baer in his last New York showing, was unable to work on the rangy Californian with his fearsome body attack, during most of the battling.

Floored in Third

Barlund floored Nova in the third with a short, hard right hook to the chin. Lou took the count of two, but rose and fought back gamely. That was the only round Barlund won, as he fought on even terms in the second.

Nova, who was elevated to his first main event at the Garden when Bob Pastor sliced into his own leg with an axe while chopping wood, made the most of his opportunity. He forced the fighting throughout and sent the Broadway "wise guys" home talking to themselves. They had made the Finn an 8-5 favorite.

Barlund Is Cut

Nova, in this first eastern appearance in two years, showed decided improvement over the novice and former national heavyweight champion, who performed in New York back in 1936. Packing 197 pounds on a 6-foot-2-inch frame, Nova gave the "Finnish Finisher" a boxing lesson and a punching lesson also. Barlund outweighed him seven pounds, having scaled 204.

Tonight's victory in the first of Promoter Mike Jacobs' heavyweight eliminations is expected to win Nova a bout with Tommy Farr, of England, or Maurice Strickland, of New Zealand.

Promoter Jacobs announced the total attendance as more than 7,800 and the paid attendance as 5,500, with the gross gate as $12,633.

Tommy Tucker, 180½, East Rockaway, N. Y., outpointed Wallace "Bud" Minault, 171¾, Brockton, Mass. (6).

Tommy Kollomich, 191½, Manhasset, N. Y., and Jerry Grieff, 187, New York, drew (4).

Al Simmons Is 'Through'

"Simmons' exhibition on Sunday when he cursed Washington fans was disgraceful," declared the Nats' owner. "I won't tolerate that kind of a player on my ball club."

The Washington owner was also irked by Simmons' statement that t' $200 fine levied against him by Griffith was an attempt to recoup part of a $500 bonus the outfielder won on Sunday by hitting .300.

"That is absurd," said Griffith. "Simmons should be ashamed to make such a statement. He should have been ashamed, too, to beg off from playing that second game of the double-header because he would be risking his .300 average.

Simmons turned in his uniform and said with some heat that he hoped he never would have to wear it again

"So far as I am concerned," the veteran outfielder told reporters, "the Washington baseball team and I are through.

"I don't expect to be back after what happened yesterday," said the 35-year-old outfielder, who once led the league in hitting. "I hope I am not. I would like to get an unconditional release so I could hook up with another club."

Pirates Win Over Giants; White Stars

Sortet Scores Twice
White Clicks 1st Time
Giants Score First
18,000 Watch Game

By the United Press.

New York, Oct. 3.—The Pittsburgh Pirates broke out a new battery—Freshman Frank Filchoch, just up from Indiana and Wilbur Sortet, an old timer from West Virginia—and scored a 13-10 victory over the New York Giants that lifted them from the cellar of the National Professional Football League's Eastern division.

With "Whizzer" White helping the cause by gaining consistently through the line and around the ends, this pair clicked for touchdowns in the second and last periods for a triumph that dropped the Giants from a triple tie for second place to last.

The Giants scored in the first period and seemed headed for an easy victory. Ed Danowski, former Fordham flash, pitched an 18-yard pass which Ward Cuff, former Marquette ace, caught in the end zone for the opening score before a crowd of 18,005 at Polo Grounds. Cuff kicked the extra point.

White & Co. Click

Then White, Colorado All-American who yielded to the lure of $15,000 in gold against an opportunity to study law at Oxford, and his mates began to click for the first time this season and started the victory march.

Filchoch set up the first Pirate touchdown when he intercepted "Tuffy" Leemans' pass on the Giant 35 and ran it to the 32. Ed Farrell, freshman from Muhlenberg, and White then battered the ball to the Giant 24 in three tries. On fourth down, Filchoch faded back and whipped home a pass which Sortet caught on the 1-yard stripe and ran over for a touchdown. Armand Niccolai, formerly of Duquesne, kicked the extra point.

The Pirates began rolling then and held command of the situation all the way. White, who gained 75 yards from scrimmage and ran back punts for a total of 103 yards, set up the second touchdown midway through the last period.

Filchoch returned a punt to the Giant 45 in the last period, and the "Whizzer" slashed through tackle to the Giant 26. An offside cost the New Yorkers 5 yards and then White spun 6 more yards to the 15. He and Filchoch each picked up a yard and on fourth down the Pirate touchdown twins clicked again for a pass that Sortet again caught in the end zone. The Pirate's attempt to run the extra over failed.

Two Vain Attempts

The Pirates also made two vain attempts at field goals—a 46-yarder by Niccolai in the third period and a 35'er in the last by Tom Burnette.

The Giants scored a field goal in the third period when Cuff barely cleared the uprights with a kick from the 10-yard line on fourth down.

The Pirates made 10 first downs and 166 yards rushing against 7 and 104 for the Giants. The Pittsburghs completed 4 of 12 passes for 50 yards against 8 out of 18 for 104.

Adamick Is Put Under Oxygen Tank

Detroit, Oct. 3 (A.P.).—Henry Ford Hospital physicians disclosed today that Jimmy Adamick, Midland, Mich., heavyweight, who suffered a cerebral concussion in a knockout defeat, has been placed in an oxygen tent, but his manager, Jimmy Brady, said he was informed it was only to guard against pneumonia.

A blood transfusion also was given Adamick, which Brady said was for purposes of speeding the patient's recovery. Dr. Albert Crawford, attending physician, said Adamick was "slightly improved" today. Adamick was knocked out by Roscoe Toles, of Detroit, in the second round of their fight last Wednesday night and was unconscious for more that 11 hours afterward.

Club Votes Grimm Out Of Money

'History' Recalled
Thousands Greet Boys
Bruins Are Confident
Practice Set Today

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 3.—A roaring reception by thousands of cheering Chicagoans keyed Manager Gabby Hartnett and his Cubs today for their World's Series warfare against the New York Yankees opening Wednesday.

Fresh from their amazing drive to the National League championship, the team rode through the downtown district in a triumphant half-mile long parade.

Some 300,000 citizens declared an impromptu holiday and turned out to greet the idols of the hour as they were borne in open cars through blizzards of confetti. Hartnett was, of course, the No. 1 hero to the cheering throng. A broad smile spread over his tomato-red face as he waved both hands to the people who shouted from the sidewalks and windows of skyscrapers in crowded LaSalle street at the city hall entrance, scene of the official reception.

Met by Mayor

When the procession through the crowd-lined downtown street reached the city hall, players were led to an open platform to receive congratulations of Mayor Edward J. Kelly. Each of the Cub players was introduced and spoke to the crowd through microphones.

The Cubs, before motoring downtown to receive their official reception, met to decide upon the division of their World Series spoils and passed up the man who managed them through 81 games this year and through five and one-half previous seasons—Charley Grimm. Twenty-five full shares were voted and the twenty-sixth was split three ways. A purse of $4,090 was voted to be divided between nine rookie players and clubhouse attaches.

With Hartnett following managerial custom and remaining outside the clubhouse, the 21 players who have been with the club all season argued in secret session for 55 minutes. Capt. Billy Herman was in charge.

Controversy Seen

As the meeting broke up Herman read off the reward.

"How about the ex-manager?" he was asked.

"It was voted on," he tactfully replied.

Why no share was voted to Grimm is certain to become a subject of controversy but those close to the players believe it was mainly due to the fact that he did not come down from his broadcasters' booth in St. Louis Saturday to congratulate them when they won the pennant. Today, however, he sent a laudatory message to Hartnett. It was read at Mayor Kelly's welcoming reception.

Considerable argument must have preceded the voting, decided by simple majority, for the meeting was one of the longest of its kind.

By their failure to vote Grimm a share the Cubs put themselves open to criticism, as in 1932 when they failed to give anything from the post season pot of gold to Rogers Hornsby, who was succeeded as manager by Grimm in midseason. At that time the Cubs also voted to give Mark Koenig, who was a vital factor in the flag drive, a half share. The Yankees made capital of this, giving the Bruins a sound verbal lacing, calling them "cheap skates" and "chiselers" from the dugout.

"I believe it was a trifle shortsighted on the part of the boys," he said. "However, it is strictly a question for them to decide. Grimm has done very well financially, the Cubs not only paid him for his time as manager but also up to the end of the year."

"Won't Be Dizzy"

With the cheers of the faithful still ringing in his ears, Hartnett retired to his plotting room to plan the strategy he will use against the Yankees in the opening game of the series at Wrigley Field Wednesday. He made only one thing clear in advance—he did not figure on starting Jay Hanna "Dizzy" Dean in the first game. The fact he would not use Dean indicated conclusively he would choose the National League's ace, "General" Bill Lee, who won 22 games and virtually pitched the Cubs into the championship.

"I don't want to be mysterious," Hartnett exclaimed, "but it won't be Diz. Now you can do your own guessing until tomorrow. I'll announce my starting pitcher then."

Owner Wrigley would like to see Dizzy Dean pitch at least one of the games in the series and he will probably get his wish, since he laid $185,000 on the line to acquire the great man.

"Actually we bought ean for this series," Wrigley said. "Everybody laughed when I said that, but we wanted a stop-gap pitcher. Dean proved that when he stopped the Pirates and he will be a great pitcher for us in the years to come."

The Yankees come to town tomorrow in their usual role of odds-on favorites to clout the Cubs into submission in five games or less. Both teams will work out at Wrigley Field, the Cubs in the morning and the Yanks in the afternoon.

World Series Notes . . . 'General' Lee Is Ready . . . Bat Boys Miss School . . . 'Riding' Seen

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 3.—The Yankees are coming—and Chicago Cub fans are banking on "General" Lee to mow 'em down . . .

There's a civil war twist to the hopes of Cub supporters as Gabby Hartnett's valiant crew prepares for the invasion Wednesday of the Ruppert Rifles from New York . . . Seventy-five years or so ago another Gen. Lee (Robert E.) covered himself with glory on Southern battlefields, and out at Northside Wrigley Field Wednesday or Thursday, loyal Chicago fans are convinced "General" Bill Lee will righthand the Bronx bombers into submission.

It should be quite a battle . . . During today's hilarious welcome for the Cubs, a publicity man for a Chicago fight club edged his way through the mob which milled around the diamond heroes at City Hall . . . "How about coming out to see our card tonight, Gabby," he yelled . . . to which the red-faced Hartnett bellowed: "Hells bells, we got a fight coming up at Wrigley Field . . . come out and see us do some swinging" . . .

Vito La Porta and Vince Garrity, Cub batboys, don't have to worry about missing classes at Lake View High School the next few days . . . They took their principal a written excuse—and when the principal opened it he read an order excusing them from classes, signed by none other than Mayor Edward J. Kelly himself . . .

J. R. Lloyd, government weather forecaster, won't climb out on a limb and say what the weather will be for the opener . . . but he predicted warm weather would hold for the week with the possibility of showers Wednesday or Thursday . . .

Series pickups: Someone asked Rip Collins what he plans to do with his series money, to which he replied . . . "Hells fire, that won't worry me; creditors are pitching their tents on my lawn right now . . ." This opener will be the first Chicago has had since 1929 . . . Both the '32 and '35 series opened away, the latter at the request of the Cubs, whose business office wanted more time . . . right now, they probably wish it were opening in New York, with thousands of ticket applications still unopened . . .

Art Felsch, of Milwaukee, has the No. 1 spot at Wrigley Field's bleacher ticket office and has settled down for his long wait with camp chair and four blankets . . . Tony Lazzeri, Jack Russell and Carl Reynolds, all former American Leaguers, form a special board of strategy against the Yanks . . . Reynolds, particularly, is looking forward to the Yank invasion . . . It was Bill Dickey, of the Yanks, who swung a roundhouse right that broke Carl's jaw back in 1932 . . . and Carl hasn't forgotten . . .

The series probably will produce some of the hardest "jockeying" in history . . . with the Yankees certain to do their share of "riding" the Cubs both afield and on the bench . . . Back in 1932, when Mark Koenig almost carried the Cubs to the pennant with a furious hitting surge in the final month, the Cubs failed to award him with a full share . . . And Babe Ruth and company rode the Chicagoans mercilessly . . . When the Cubs today failed to "cut" former Manager Charley Grimm in on their series pool, many fans predicted the Yank "bench attorneys" would lose little time in reminding the Bruins of their action.

Down In Front

By Richards Vidmer

New York, Oct. 3.—It seemed to me that there was something I was supposed to do today, but for some reason it escapes me, and as a result I'm in something of a muddle.

Let's see, it might have been in connection with Columbia's victory over Yale on Saturday. Could that have been it? Perhaps, for there were a great many things in that battle worth mentioning.

VIDMER.

Outstanding it seemed to me, was the speed with which lou Little whipped his small squad into shape and synchronized their play, especially on the offense. As the Lions moved into their first game of the season they looked as though they were heading for the finish, they worked with such precision and timing.

It may be that three weeks from now Yale could beat the Light Blue, for Yale looked like a team that would get better as the season progressed. It wasn't as bad as it appeared in that first test; merely ragged. The forwards allowed Sid Luckman to wade around among them and pass as he pleased in the first half, but caught on quickly enough to charge through the last quarters, hurrying his tosses with less destructive results.

And, incidentally, it seemed to me that there is a great opportunity for some Columbia receiver to make a name for himself that will go ringing down the football ages. It may be Art Radvilas, a tall rawboned back, who has been converted from end. He has a fine pair of hands and plenty of speed. He also has the height that means so much to a man on the other end of a pass.

Fame Beckons

With Luckman an unerring marksman—he never failed to hit his man with the ball on Saturday—there is the opportunity for the completion of another immortal passing combination. There have been, to mention a few of the best remembered, Dorais and Rockne, of Notre Dame; Pritchard and Merrilat, of the Army; Friedman and Oosterbaan, of Michigan; Frank and Kelley, of Yale. But so far, though he has been hailed as a brilliant passer for two seasons, Luckman's name never has been coupled with a sensational receiver.

He was dropping the ball into outstretched arms all afternoon in the Yale Bowl, however, completing two tosses that were hurled 50 yards. But when the last whistle ended and the crowd shuffled its way down the ramps, there was only one name on everyone's lips—Luckman. They sang his praises in awed tones, partly for his sturdy plunging, partly for his kicking, partly for his jarring defense work, but mostly for his passing. I didn't hear anyone mention the name of a single receiver when the palms and plaudits were handed out.

Leaping Lena

Yet Radvilas made one catch that would have done credit to Larry Kelley at his peak. Luckman faded well back behind his line of scrimmage and was surrounded by blue jerseys. A couple of tacklers already were upon him, grabbing at his legs. But with perfect poise, ignoring the fact that he was about to be thrown for a 15-yard loss, he drew back his arm and with his uncanny arm whipped the ball down the field.

It sailed with the wind toward Radvilas—and two other fellows. The two other fellows were wearing the dark blue of Yale, but somehow, the tall Columbia back shook them off, came a step back to meet the ball, leaped high and batted it with one hand, catching it as it came down.

That was a great job of receiving. Yet few realized that Radvilas, not Luckman, was responsible for the gain that put the ball in position for a touchdown.

Maybe it was Radvilas I had on my mind. Or maybe it was the grand job Lou Little has done in a short time in building up his team's offense. Maybe it was the thought that a lot of concentration is necessary on the defense, especially against passes. If Columbia is to continue through even one more week at its present pace, for the Army has a rather fair attack of its own. Maybe it was the thought that I would like to be able to sit in on that Army-Columbia game at West Point next Saturday.

Well, why not?

Oh, yes, that was it. The world's series will be on and the Yankees can't win in three games. Yes, that was it. The world's series, and I've got to run or I'll miss that train to Chicago. The baseball season isn't over yet—not quite yet.

Quarles Signs For Feldman Fight Here

Norment Quarles, pink-cheeked conquerer of Lou Gevinson and rated among the foremost of the Nation's lightweight ringmen, last night signed to meet Lou Feldman, of New York, in a 10-round bout next Monday night at the Arena. The match will usher in the winter season at the W street auditorium.

The winner of this bout is expected to get a shot at either Tony Canzoneri, who is attempting a comeback, or Lew Ambiers, recently dethroned lightweight champion, who will begin a barnstorming tour in the near future which he hopes will lead to a return bout with Henry Armstrong.

Feldman scored a decisive victory over Paul Lee in his last appearance here several weeks ago, and figures to give Quarles a similar going over. Feldman, one of the cleverest ringmen ever spawned in New York, will be pitted against a youngster with a harder punch, and the two contrasting styles augur well for a close fight.

Sarron Beats Yucatan Kid in Police Show Bout

Montana Wins Over Canadian

La Mothe Outclassed Stopped in Eighth 5,000 See Program Montana Powerful

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Battle-scarred Pete Sarron picked his surprised carcass up off the floor last night at Griffith Stadium, squinted quizzically down the barrel of battered nose into the menacing countenance of the Yucatan Kid, then lunged into battle with a furious, two-fisted assault that carried him to victory, eventually, over the Mexican Indian in their 15-round engagement.

Some 5,000 fans, wrapped snugly in autumn haberdashery to ward off the chill October air, howled in amazement as Yucatan exploded a straight right hand on Sarron's chin in the third round, putting him down for no count. They roared again in the sixth when Yucatan half-pushed, half-punched Sarron to the canvas a second time, and again for no count.

But it was no ordinary pugilist the Yucatan Kid saw before him—not a man to be frightened away by a couple of trips to the deck. It was Petey Sarron—the same old unpredictable, clowning, smiling, fighting and clever Sarron, and Yucatan simply wasn't in his class.

Small Montana Wins

Lest we overlook the matter, their bout was co-featured with a 15-round duel in which Small Montana scored a technical knockout over Aurelien La Mothe, of Canada, after 2 minutes and 35 seconds of one-sided slugging in the eighth round. That bout was as uneven as the finale was close, and La Mothe never had a chance after the first few punches of the fight.

Sarron, getting back to the windup, had the Kid on the verge of a knockout in the second round, staggering him with a powerful left hook to the head, and following up with another left and a right to the same sector.

Those two knockdowns threatened to be the turning point of the bout. Yucatan, crowding, bullying and blasting away at Sarron looked dangerous enough to flatten the gnome-like Birmingham gladiator.

But Yucatan was on the floor himself, twice in the seventh round when Sarron caught him with the full power of his rejuvenated left and a right, and sent him reeling to the canvas. The first time he side-stepped Yucatan's headlong rush and cracked him with a right behind the ear as he went by, and when the Kid arose without a count to dispute the point, Sarron put him down again with another right to the head.

Yucatan, however, was as game as they come. He got up and came back fighting, and almost won the fight. He was all even at the end of the tenth round, and again at the end of the thirteenth. But Sarron carried the last two rounds in a manner that left no doubt as to the victor. He clubbed Yucatan viciously with both hands, belted him around the head and body, tearing after him like a bulldog on a stray cat.

Sarron Down Again

Sarron won eight rounds, lost three, and drew in four on The Post's score sheet. All of the sessions were close, usually decided by the last punch before the bell.

Yucatan half-shoved, half-knocked Sarron down in the sixth with a stiff right to the neck. He shook Petey up with more of the same punches to the same sector in the fourth, and in the eighth he threatened to put Petey away after crowding him into a neutral corner and belaboring him with more rights to the body.

It was blow for blow throughout the last five rounds, with Sarron's superior strategy and greater experience telling in the long run. He husbanded his strength for a final, decisive flourish in the last two rounds, while Yucatan appeared to have fought himself out, evening the score in the thirteenth.

Montana Too Clever

Montana didn't try after the second round, deliberately passing up clean shots at his outclassed opponent. It was obvious to the audience that the eventual winner was sparing the pale Canadian as much as possible. For a time it looked as though he were saving him, giving the fans a run for their money, before knocking him out in a later round.

The two wore 5-ounce gloves, and that didn't help La Mothe. Several times during the one-sided affair Montana slapped him around like a gym bag, staggering him with a furious blast to the head, knocking him half way across the ring. But he never seemed desirous of finishing La Mothe. It was like a cat toying with a mouse.

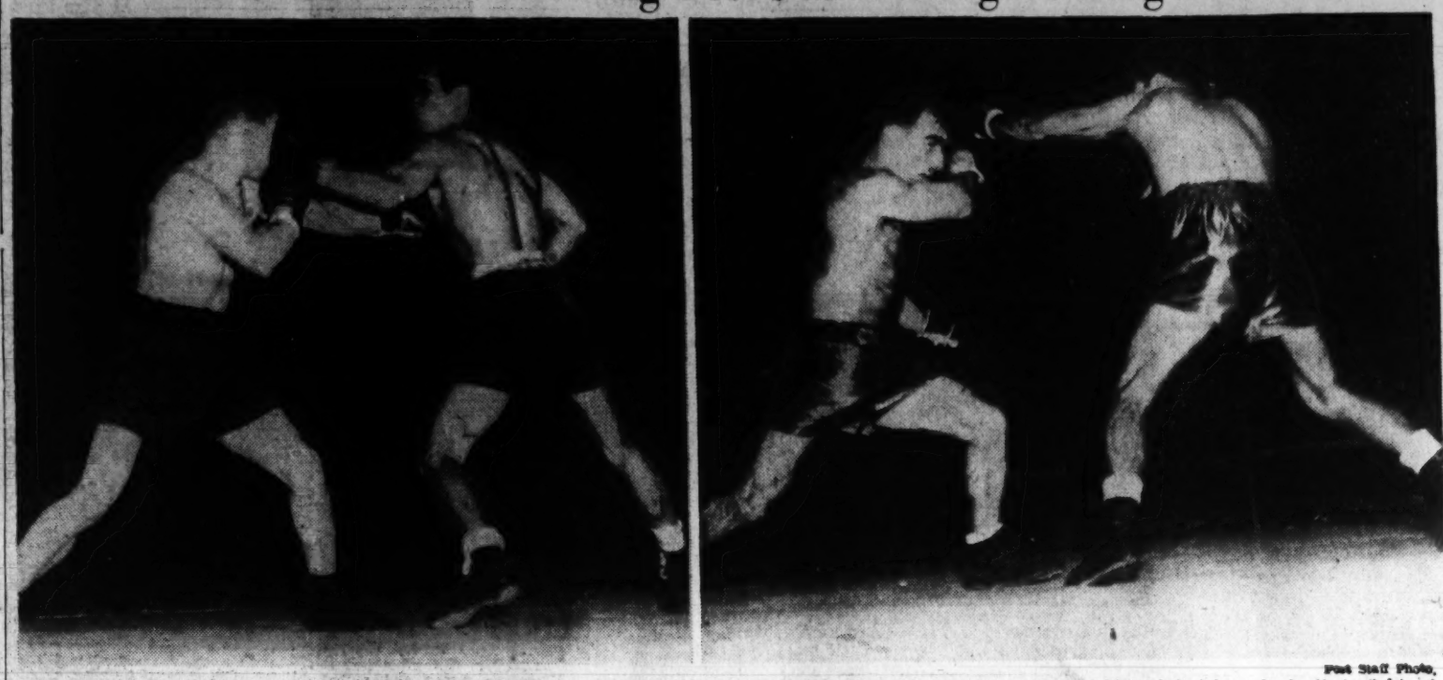

The end came immediately after Montana had knocked La Mothe silly with another whirlwind of leather. The Canadian's head was outside the ropes and Montana was standing in the center of the ring, not stalking his prey but waiting for La Mothe to recover. Bowen, however, decided the loser had enough, and stopped the proceedings.

Aaron Bassin outpointed George Cross in a three-round engagement. Both hailed from No. 5 Precinct Boys Club, and came in at 90 pounds.

Johnny Hutchison, 126, outpointed Cyril Josephs, 123, in the 10-round opening bout of the card. It was a hard fight, Hutchison losing a tooth at the end of the fifth round, and suffering a bad gash over his left eye. He punched a little too hard, and too often for Josephs, however, and won handily.

Anacostia, Wilson Battle to 0-0 Tie

'Flash' Gordon Injured in Game Faircloth Stars for Anacostians Large Crowd Sees Teams Wage Hard Battle

Opening the 1938 schoolboy grid season officially and with a flourish of old-time rivalry, Woodrow Wilson and Anacostia battled yesterday to a scoreless tie on the Eastern gridiron. Rained out Friday, the game yesterday attracted full stands and gave an indication that the high school series this year will be closely fought.

Wilson, playing its second year in the series, was the only team to threaten a score, and that late in the final period. Taking the ball on Anacostia's 44 with about four minutes of the game remaining Bob Miller, Wilson end, took a shuttle pass and broke away to the 33 before he was downed. A long pass, Frank Bond to Bill Freer, added another first down and Miller took the ball again for 7 yards to Anacostia's 10. The Anacostians took one too many times out at this point and it cost them a 5-yard penalty.

With four downs and only 5 yards to go, Wilson was only able to make 1 yard. One of the four downs was a long pass over the goal from Bond directly into the arms of Freer, who dropped the scoring pass while the stands moaned.

The rest of the game was played on almost even terms. Each team managed eight first downs, and though each passed frequently, most of the aerials went for very short gains or were wide. Anacostia took the opening kick-off and after two attempts to advance, fumbled. Wilson moved in a series of plunges to Anacostia's 15 but that was all.

The first quarter closed as Bond, easily the outstanding ball-carrier of the two teams, used his toe for a change and kicked out on Anacostia's 2-yard line. A hasty return kick as the second period started put the ball in Wilson's possession on Anacostia's 35, from whence Charley Garner moved it to the 20. Mike Dix, Anacostia center, intercepted the first of two passes then, but Art Faircloth was forced to kick out of danger after three downs.

Entering the game after Robert "Flash" Gordon was carried out with a badly wrenched left knee, the flying mite kept his team's spirit up with frequent and appreciable gains. Gordon's injury was originally suffered in the Gonzaga game last week, and the additional damage done his leg made it necessary to remove him to Providence Hospital for observation.

Wilson's competitive spirit in the game, a spirit which was notably lacking last year, seemed to indicate that the school might furnish the upper bracket clubs more competition in 1938. Anacostia, playing its first year in the high school series, made a strong bid for respect in holding the Presidents to no score.

Gordon's Injury Not Very Serious

The dislocated knee which Robert "Flash" Gordon, Anacostia High School football star, received in the Anacostia-Wilson game yesterday, has been diagnosed by Dr. George F. Fiore, of Providence Hospital, as not serious enough to keep him out of the school's line-up for long.

According to the examining physician, the flashy halfback will remain in the hospital at least until noon today, when an X-ray will be taken and the dislocated joint put back in place. The doctor described the injury as a very painful one. The length of his absence from Anacostia's eleven, the doctor said, would rest entirely with the boy's parents and coach.

Bears Win, Take Lead

By the United Press.

Newark, N. J., Oct. 3.—Newark's Bears defeated the Kansas City Blues, 7-1, tonight to take a 2-1 lead in the little world series. Immediately after the game both clubs boarded a special train for Kansas City where the series will be resumed Wednesday.

Johnny Haley, leading International League pitcher, limited the American Association winners to four hits but he was wild on several occasions, particularly in the fifth when two passes and Davis' single loaded the bases with one out. However, the big red-head pitched himself out of a hole by fanning Joost and Judnich and throwing a pop-up ball to Gallagher.

The Bears sewed up the game in the first inning as they nicked Marvin Breuer, who registered three of his team's final round playoff victories, for two runs. A walk to Jim Gleeson started the baby-faced right-hander's undoing. Gleeson stole second and scored on Charlie Keller's single.

Buddy Rosar was hit by a pitched ball and Les Scarsella's infield hit loaded the bases with Keller scoring the second run as Jack Saltzgaver juggled Merril May's hopper.

The Bears added two more in the fifth with Scarsella, who accounted for three of his team's seven hits, tripling after Keller and Rosar had walked.

Wilson, West Coast Sebastion, Imported to Wrestle Here

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Feeling the urge for new interior decorations in the Arena, Promoter Joe Turner last night announced the importation of one George Wilson for Thursday night's wrestling show. Wilson is new here, coming directly from the Pacific Coast where he has been something of a sensation.

Wilson has his task cut out for him this week, as Herr Turner has made arrangements for him to meet John Katan, the rapscallion who has spread woe and consternation among the patrons of the art by his decidedly uncricket actions in the past few weeks. He lost to Yvon Robert last week, true enough, but the fans want to see a better job done on his cordially disliked carcass.

MESKE.

In Wilson, Turner believes he has just the man to satisfy their craving for Katan's head. Standing 5 feet 10½ inches tall, weighing 205 pounds, Wilson is reputedly one of the toughest hombres operating on the coast. A former football star he specializes in the flying tackle, the deadly weapon that carried Gus Sonnenberg to the top of the heap a decade ago and put a new twist in wrestling.

Wilson's career since leaving college has been colorful and varied. He played football for the Western Wildcats in Seattle, and later for the Providence Steam Rollers when that club was in the National Pro League.

He taught school, labored as a grocery clerk, insurance salesman, and later still a lumberjack. Wrestling, in his opinion, is easier than some of those jobs, and he isn't overlooking the Katan match when he says it, because he's heard all about scowling Jawn, and believes he'll reform him.

The main bout Thursday involves Ernie Dusek and Gino Garibaldi, and Turner last night signed Ed Meske and Ed Newman for another preliminary—which all but insures the evening's success.

Redskins Leading In Yards Gained; Giants Second

New York, Oct. 3 (AP).—The Redskins and Giants, who meet in Washington Sunday, are running one-two in the battle for ground gaining and forward passing in the National Professional Football League.

The league champion Redskins have gained an average of 324 yards in three games and completed 31 of 54 passes for 57 per cent. The Giants moved up from third to second place last week in yardage gained with an average of 281. They also have completed 22 out of 39 aerials for 56 per cent.

Washington also has scored the most points with 79, 1 more than the Green Bay Packers counted in four games. The Giants and Chicago Bears share defensive honors. The Giants held their opponents to 144 yards per game in two encounters. Only 19 points have been scored against the Bears in three engagements.

Ed Oliver, Dave Douglas Win Pro-am

By Merrell W. Whittlesey.

Ed Oliver, the young Wilmington, Del., professional who is rapidly gaining fame as pro golf's longest hitter, and Dave Douglas, son of a Wilmington professional, romped off with first prize in the East Potomac invitation pro-amateur tournament yesterday with a 6-under-par best ball of 66.

As the 6,780-yard revised layout took its toll of an all-star field of 28 teams from five States and the District, Oliver and his partner beat par by a stroke on the outgoing nine with a 35 and were back in 31, including five consecutive threes.

Oliver's one-over-par 73 won top money in the pro sweepstakes, that included a $50 gift by the club, and ran his winnings for the day to $80. George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood, and Rut Coffey, the stocky Winchester mentor, tied for second in the sweepstakes with 36, 39—75.

Second place in the pro-amateur went to the Chevy Chase duo of Robert T. Barnett and Ralph Quinter, jr., with a 71. Quinter birdied the fifth hole of B course after driving the 240-yard green, and it was the only hole they birdied, or went over on, during the day. They were the only team that hit par or better on each hole.

Two teams split third prize in the pro-am play, Coffey and Paul Bennett, of Martinsburg, W. Va., 33—39, and Buddy Sharkey and Al Jamison, of Indian Spring, 36—36, with Sharkey's unofficial 74 the best round of the day among the simonpures. Coffey birdied the last hole to make the tie.

Three Split Prize

Three teams split the final prize at a 73 figure, one over par, Lewis Worsham and John Brawner, of Chevy Chase, with 35—38—73; Fred McLeod and E. A. Merkle, Columbia, 35—38—73, and Andy Gibson and Spencer Overton, Baltimore, with a like score.

Three pros tied for second in the sweepstakes with 77s, Wiffy Cox, who lost two strokes to par on the seventeenth hole by three-putting; Andy Gibson and Robert Barnett, Mel Shorey, Gene Larkin and Cliff Spencer missed by a shot with 78s.

Oliver and Douglas, who won the Lancaster, Pa., ro-amateur the last two years, the last time with a best ball of ten under par, were tied for the lead as they passed the nine-hole mark with a 35, one under par, from Douglas' first-hole birdie, where he drove the green, and Oliver's four on the third. They both missed par on the 460-yard par-four seventh, taking three from the edge of the green.

Birdies the Tenth

Oliver birdied the tenth via a 7-footer, and on the thirteenth throw seventeenth they were even 3s, a par on thirteenth, birdies by both on fourteenth, an eagle by Oliver on the fifteenth, where his spoon shot was 2 feet from the cup; birdie by Douglas on sixteenth and par on seventeenth. They played the last hole in par 4 for the 66.

Oliver, who won the Central Pennsylvania and South Jersey opens this year and finished near the top in several major tournaments, including the Canadian and Westchester opens, was playing with borrowed clubs. He will return home today and come back Thursday and Friday for the District Open championship at Washington, where he will occupy the co-favorite's role with Wiffy Cox.

On Hunting

Several weeks ago we noted the large gains in big game animals in the 158 National Forests. Annually, the service disposes of the surplus animals in several ways, the most popular of which is by hunts. One which may be enjoyed by local hunters, and during the past few years has become the largest single sporting event in North Carolina, is the Pisgah Deer Hunt, held every fall in the Pisgah National Game Preserve in western North Carolina. Eagerly awaited by hunters this year's hunt will extend from November 7 to December 3, according to the U. S. Forest Service, which supervises the hunt in conjunction with the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Development. A total of 1,600 hunters will be allowed to participate in the hunt, but no hunter will be allowed to hunt more than three days.

ACKERMAN.

A magnificent herd of approximately 4,500 deer roam the wild and almost impenetrable ridges and valleys of the vast 100,000-acre Pisgah preserve. Approximately 150 black bear also are to be found in the more remote recesses of the forest. The supply of food in the preserve is inadequate for so large a herd, especially in view of the fact that almost a thousand fawns are born every year on the preserve. As a result, the Pisgah Forest preserve is opened every fall and adventurous huntsmen are permitted to try their luck in an effort to reduce the herd to a number that can be adequately cared for. The hunters are allowed to kill either buck or doe, but each hunter is allowed only one kill, after which he is automatically disqualified. If a huntsman accidentally crosses the path of a bear, he is allowed to kill it, but that also disqualifies him from the remainder of the hunt since only one bear or deer can be killed by one hunter.

Last year hunters seemed to prefer to treat the bears in the preserve with more circumspection than the deer, as only 10 bears were killed during the month-long hunt as compared with 709 deer. This difference is attributed to the difference in the ratio between the deer and bear population.

The number of applications for permits to participate in the deer hunt always far exceeds the number that can be accepted. This year, as in the past, the first 1,600 applicants received will be accepted, with the exception of those on the "black list" for violations of the regulations in previous years. Only 1,200 applicants will be accepted for the main hunt, the "check-in, check-out" hunt. The other 400 will participate in the wilderness hunt. In the latter hunt, only men in good physical condition are allowed to go into the preserve to stay for three days, carrying their own camping equipment and paraphernalia, and hunting under rugged and primitive conditions.

In the main hunt, women as well as men will be allowed to participate.

* * * *

Hunters will check in every morning and out at night, either camping on the public camp grounds adjoining the game preserve, or staying for the night in the nearby towns of Asheville, Brevard, Hendersonville, Pisgah Forest and Waynesville.

The main hunt is conducted in three-day periods, starting every Monday and Thursday during the entire four weeks. About 150 hunters will be allowed in each group. As each gets a deer or bear he is disqualified for the remainder of the hunt. Any hunter not lucky enough to bag a kill within three days does not get another chance.

Approximately 60,000 acres of the preserve will be covered during the four weeks, the remainder of the preserve being inaccessible due to barren rocks, dense thickets and precipitous slopes. It has been diveded into two separate sections, the northern and southern shooting circles. The main hunt will open on the southern area the first week, going on to the northern circle the second week in order to give the first a rest. The third week will be a repetition of the first, and the fourth a repetition of the second.

The Forest Service expects the hunt this year to be the most successful of any held since it was inaugurated five years ago. Hunters this year will be allowed to take their own cars into the preserve to get to and from the "stands" or compartments. This will greatly facilitate transportation, as heretofore trucks have been used to carry the hunters about inside the preserve. Plans for speeding up the check-in process have been arranged, so as to prevent any unnecessary waiting in line. Dozens of special officers, rangers and State game protectors will be on hand to supervise the hunt, to guide hunters to their assigned areas and help them carry out their kill.

Chances for bagging a deer during the hunt this year are better than in previous years, since both buck and doe are legal targets. At first only the bucks were allowed to be killed, but it soon become apparent that the ratio between doe and buck on the preserve was badly proportioned, likely to result in a smaller and scrawnier herd. With the decision of the game and fish division of the Department of Conservation and Development to allow hunters to shoot doe as well as buck, the hunter's chances of bagging his prey have been increased more than 50 per cent.

Pays $19.20; Blind Eagle Is Second

Challenges in Vain Bold Stroke Third Double Pays $785.40 6,000 Fans Attend

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

Laurel, Md., Oct. 3—Mrs. Colin MacLeod's Pernie couldn't have saved any more ground today had he been the mechanical-rabbit on a dog track. In contrast, Mrs. Emil Denemark's Blind Eagle couldn't have lost any more ground had he been in the outside row on a merry-go-round. This is why Pernie won the Anacostia Purse and Blind Eagle finished second. Third money in the field of seven went to Bold Stroke.

Pernie, beaten a nose at Havre de Grace, was in charge of Jockey Charlie Corbett and paid a healthy $19.20 mutuel. He won by a length and a quarter in his thirteenth appearance of the year.

Denemark Colt Strong

The son of Brown Bud broke in front, but there was hardly a moment that he was not threatened by some member of the field. Night Intruder and Brown Knight took cracks at him and weakened before Blind Eagle came around on the outside as the field approached the stretch. The Denemark colorbearer appeared headed for victory when he stuck his head in front, but Jockey Sarno could not straighten the colt and he went far out, losing his advantage.

Those who played the "2 and 5" combination of Balcony and Saralight in the daily double collected the season's highest pay-off, $785.40, for the usual deuce. Balcony, an old Maryland favorite who has been running poorly, picked today to show a return to form and headed out Tuleyries Lin and Idyllic, members of the Feltner-Bull entry, in the first race. Balcony paid $76 in his own right.

Saralight, in the colors of the Foxcatcher Farm, also was a surprise winner. With three poor New York races as a recommendation, this daughter of Sir Galahad III romped off with the third race to pay $20.80. Chatabit and Ministress followed her to the imaginary wire.

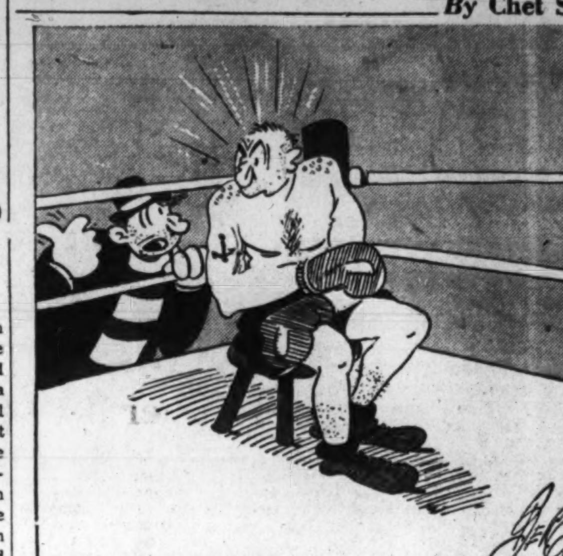

Good Chance Takes Chase

The first steeplechase to be staged at a major Maryland track this year went to the Rokeby Stable's Good Chance. Unable to get in the money in seven previous tries this year, Good Chance bounced home four lengths ahead of Buck Langhorne, essaying to be a timber-topper for the first time. The Hour, pace setter most of the way, was third. The winner paid $6.50.

A son of the speedy Jamestown, Paddy, won the fourth race at six furlongs. He brought Jockey Maurice Peters his second winner of the day and scored by three lengths over Sun Plume and The Serf. Pause drew much play but stumbled and lost his jockey at the start. Paddy paid $10.90.

At The Post

Dear Al. Selections at Laurel.

Rough Time, owned by Yancey Christmas, of Upper Marlboro, Md. Christmases, will be shipped to New York Friday for a crack at the $5,000 added Interborough Handicap, a six furlong sprint. Rough Time came out of the Capital Handicap here last Saturday in excellent shape and with his second straight victory in the Laurel opening-day stake. The son of Grand Time wasn't named for any other stakes at this track, but has three engagements at Pimlico. Maryland horsemen were glad to see big, likeable Yancey take down the big coin. He has had his share of bad breaks of late and deserves an occasional nod from Dame Fortune. The Washington bookmakers spent yesterday morning trying to line up WPA jobs after the beating they took on Rough Time. The fact that Yancey's sister picked the horse was a blow to the hold 'em and back 'em boys. Mower and Blue Tints have been added to the schooling list giving Starter Jim Milton 22 horses to teach better post manners. Jockeys Workman and Robertson arrived and will be in action today. Although the Wheeling meeting only averaged $32,000 a day in betting, the track is said to have made a slight profit. General Manager Frank Brady announced that a score by innings with batteries will be displayed in the centerfield on World Series games.

BILL.

First race—Rosepillar was third in a classy maiden field at Belmont and appears to be the right one in a rather open race. Bud's King was in plenty of trouble last out at Havre de Grace and will be right there with clear sailing. Court Counsel was thought enough of to be in the Eastern Shore Handicap.

Second race—Swimalong was a beaten favorite in the Foxcatcher Hounds and appears well placed for this. I'm going to string along. Prattler was second in a claiming event in New York where he downed some of these. Little Woman showed good on the half-milers and could surprise.

Third race—Alexandrine indicated at Havre de Grace that she is on her toes by finishing second in good company. With the right ride this one may score. Teddy's Star turned in a fair effort on a slow track and seems to be regaining best form. Some Count has run in much better fields.

Fourth race—Lady Solace turned in a neat second at the other track and seems to be a shade the best of these Maryland breds. Coursing is stepping up after winning and looks second best. Licketysplit can better recent performances.

Fifth race—Conquer seems headed for another set of brackets in this field. Any price will be a good one. Genie Palatine has learned how to act at the gates and has retained that good speed. Sir Jim James may have needed that last.

Sixth race—Nansemond is dropping down for this and gets in with only 100 pounds. Appears to be nicely placed. White Sand is on edge as that recent win suggests. Chainwick was fourth in an allowance race in the mud. Could surprise here.

Seventh race—Surprise Box turned in a fair race in $2,500 company. Goes with cheap ones today and a win would not surprise me. Dark Friend is better than generally rated and deserves consideration. Camaraderie for the minor award.

Eighth race—Black Grouse won over cheap ones by six lengths in New England and may take these into camp. New Deal is the one to beat. Panalong has a recent second that makes him dangerous.

Best bet—Nansemond.

Dot Bundy Enters Finals in Tennis

Los Angeles, Oct. 3 (AP).—Dorothy Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., gained the final round of women's singles in the Pacific Sithwest tennis championships today, defeating Mme. Simone Mathieu, of France, 6—1, 7—9, 8—6.

Chubby Dorothy's youthful stamina and wicked forehand shots that found the far corners of the court proved the deciding factor. She will play the winner of the Margot Lumb-Sarah Palfred Fabyan match.

Our Guest Selector

Our Guest Selector for today is Bucky Harris, manager of the Washington ball club. While not an away-from-the-track turf enthusiast, Bucky is not a stranger to Laurel when the sun is bright and the baseball season is history. In addition to his diamond knowledge, Harris is better than a green hand at separating the chaff from the wheat with the aid of a past performance sheet. He wants runs from his ball players and a run from his horses.

HARRIS

2—Prattler, Swimalong, Promoter.
3—Patsey Begone, Mattapony, Graeme Cracker.
4—My Shadow, Of Course, Nancy Reed.
5—Conquer, Genie Palatine, Sir Jim James.
6—San Antioca, Chainwick, White Sand.
7—The Runner, Camaraderie, Dark Friend.
8—Panalong, Army and Navy, New Deal.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BALCONY, $76.00, $16.50, $12.20; †TULEYRIES LIN, $3.10, $3.80; †IDYLLIC, $3.80.

BALCONY, first away, shook off ROUGH BUDDY to gain a clear lead and rallied to a drive to withstand challenges of TULEYRIES LIN and IDYLLIC. TULEYRIES LIN was rushed to contention on the outside, but hung after reaching the leaders. IDYLLIC, racing in the thick of contention on the inside, closed with good courage while in close quarters along the rail. BUD'S QUEEN was away poorly and improved her position steadily. FLYING ORPHAN could not reach serious contention. ROUGH BUDDY had early speed and weakened. PASSE PARTOUT moved up leaving the backstretch and tired. JOLLY DUCHESS had early speed and was pulled up when she went lame.

SECOND RACE—About 2 miles and 14 furlongs. Purse, $1,000. The Potomac Steeplechase. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 2:05. Off at 2:06. Winner, Rokeby Stable's br. or blk. g. (5), by Chance Shot—Sundina. Trained by J. T. Skinner. Value to winner, $700; second, $150; third, $100; fourth, $50. Time, 4:01.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GOOD CHANCE, $6.50, $3.80, $2.50; BUCK LANGHORNE, $4.40, $2.80; THE HOUR, $3.10.

GOOD CHANCE, steadied along within striking distance while fencing well, disposed of THE HOUR to take command, shook off the challenge of BUCK LANGHORNE and drew out to win easily. BUCK LANGHORNE went forwardly from the break while fencing unsteadily, loomed menacingly after the twelfth fence, but weakened. THE HOUR set a strong pace, drew far out, but weakened gradually after a mile. PONIARD moved up with a rush after a mile, but dropped out of it suddenly and pulled up lame. LITTLE SWEDE lacked speed and jumped poorly.

THIRD RACE—Five and one-half furlongs. Purse, $1,000. For 2-year-old maiden fillies. Start good from stall. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 2:36½. Off at 2:41½. Winner, Foxcatcher Farm's b. f. (2), by Sir Gallahad III—Sarietta. Trained by R. E. Handlen.

SARALIGHT, off in the first flight, ran DISTORT into defeat to get to the front at the turn, drew out gradually and won easily. CHATABIT was hard ridden from the start, but hung after being closest to the winner through the stretch. MINISTRESS was off poorly and made up some ground. FESTIVITIES was forced wide for racing room and showed a good effort from a sluggish beginning. DINAMITA was in close quarters along the rail to the stretch, but failed to rally when clear. READY-ABOUT was off in a tangle, was rushed to the leaders and tired in the closing furlong. DISTORT was in motion at the break, showed early foot while racing greenly and stopped.

Daily Double, Balcony and Saralight, Paid $785.40.

FOURTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,100; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 3:06. Off at 3:11. Winner, Wheatley Stable's dk. b. c. PADDY, rushed to the front in the opening furlong, saved ground and drew out in the stretch to win with speed in reserve. SUN PLUME, away slowly, improved position steadily on the outside to show a good effort. THE SERF came wide into the stretch and closed full of run. MERRY GESTURE, closest to the pace to midstretch, weakened suddenly. SLAVE CHARM could not keep up. CHERACHIN was through early. SIS LOTTIE had early foot. PAUSE stumbled and unseated his rider at the break.

DO PLAY, steadied along while in close quarters along the rail, saved much ground entering the stretch to take command, but had to be kept to a drive to stave off the closing bid of WHY TARRY. The latter, slow to begin, was sent wide while improving position approaching the stretch and closed resolutely. THE BOXER ran MANEUVER into defeat to take command, shook off ROYAL BUSINESS and continued willingly when displaced. ROYAL BUSINESS showed an excellent effort. LADY ELGIN faltered after going forwardly for half. DISSEMBLER had to be taken up when in close quarters along the backstretch and failed to rally thereafter. COMPANY HALT was off poorly and tired after being rushed in the early part.

Employment Up in August

New York, Oct. 3 (AP).—Weekly average earnings and average work week increased 3.8 per cent in August over July, and employment rose 0.7 per cent during the same period in 25 manufacturing industries, the National Industrial Conference Board reported today.

Total man hours increased 4.4 per cent with the largest advance reported in the iron and steel industry, 21.9 per cent. Gains of more than 10 per cent were reported in the following industries: hosiery and knit goods, furniture, wool and silk.

However, compared with August, 1937, the month was still low, except for average hourly earnings which were only 0.6 per cent under. Employment was 26.1 per cent under and total man hours and pay rolls were more than 33 per cent below.

Steel Operations Rise to 47.9%

New York, Oct. 3 (AP).—Operations in the steel industry for the current week will advance 1.2 points to 47.9 per cent of capacity compared with 46.7 per cent last week, the American Iron & Steel Institute estimated today.

A month ago operations were at the rate of 39.9 per cent of capacity while a year ago they were 66.1 per cent.

Foreign Markets

By the Associated Press.

London, Oct. 3.—The stock market moved irregularly early today, but turned heavy at the close as a steady stream of selling orders came into the market. Transatlantic issues remained steady, while the gilt-edged group, industrials and foreign liens sold lower. Traders awaited the outcome of the debate in the House of Commons before extending commitments. Tobacco and rayon shares were offered in supply.

Paris—Security prices closed generally higher in the bourse today, although trading was on a small scale. Rentes finished 15 centimes down to 350 higher and Suez Canal sold at 22,790 francs, a gain of more than 1,000 francs. Royal Dutch advanced about 250 francs and Bank of France shares were up fractionally.

Liverpool—Wheat futures closed 1d to 1¼d net higher today, prices advancing on frost reports in parts of Argentine and small weekly shipments to the United Kingdom. Cotton futures advanced in sympathy with firmness in Eastern markets and a bullish Egyptian cotton crop estimate. Final quotations were 3 to 10 points up.

Stocks Continue Gains With Wings of Peace
Advance Wipes Out 77% of War Scare Drop
Profit-Taking Checks Speed of Upturn

New York, Oct. 3.—The stock market scored its sixth consecutive advance today, the last five of which have been due to the new reign of peace in Europe, and Wall Street is turning its attention to domestic trade conditions for a change. An advance of 0.44 point in the composite average today meant that the market has made up 77 per cent of the reaction brought about by the war scare. From the high of the year, made on July 25, to the low of the reaction, made on September 26, the list lost 7.90 points and it has now come back 6.06 points.

The market today reflected profit-taking which at times brought periods of irregularity. The steady upswing, since it became known that leading European powers would meet to solve the Czechoslovakian problem, has been so sharp that in-and-out traders are inclined to cash in on their profits and others are standing by waiting for the normal corrective reaction. The signs of irregularity today, however, did nothing to upset the return of bullish sentiment which has come to Wall Street in the last week.

Brokers with foreign connections reported their European customers still on the buying side, as they have been for several days. While all is peace and quiet abroad, the flow of gold to America continues, the unusually heavy arrivals over the week-end being estimated at about $89,000,000. This represents purchases made during the foreign crisis and it is impossible to know just what days the various blocks of the metal were purchased for shipment here. Engagements made today in England amounted to $3,573,000 and sterling, in this market, closed down 2⅝ cents, indicating that as yet there is no repatriation of funds shipped here hurriedly for safekeeping.

War Still Threatens

In the fact the question of war or peace is still so uncertain abroad that in domestic business circles it is not expected there will be any let-down in foreign purchases of steel, copper, and other metals or materials needed to keep armaments at a high level. Remarks made at the meeting of the British Parliament today showed that there is conviction in the minds of many that the peace negotiations last week may have done no more than delay an eventual conflict.

On the domestic business front the month started well. The steel industry is beginning the week with operations at 47.9 per cent of capacity, a gain of 1.2 points over a week ago. This is a new high for the year and reviews anticipate a further rise from this level as automobile manufacturers swing into the production of their 1939 models. Estimates of freight car loadings are encouraging and building operations are showing some stimulus from the Government's pump priming.

Shares of the building supply companies were prominent in today's stock dealings, new highs being made by Johns Manville, National Gypsum, Crane and United States Gypsum, the last named jumping nearly 5 points. Trading continued heavy in the motor and accessory stocks but price changes were irregular. Most active of this section was United States Rubber, which added another point. Hupp was active and higher while small recessions were scored in General Motors and Chrysler. Sperry led the aviation division with a point gain.

New Highs

Steel preferred also made a new high, as did Kennecott, Lone Star Cement, Lee Rubber and Ingersoll Rand, the last soaring 4¾ points to cross par. In general the gains of active leaders were held to 2 points or less and modest declines took place in such pivotal issues as Bethlehem, Nickel, Republic, Socony and Steel. Trading of 1,462,030 shares kept the brokerage fraternity in the good frame of mind.

Among the commodities wheat was lifted on frost reports from Argentina but this was partly offset by an increase in the U. S. visible supply. The close in Chicago was higher by ⅛ to ½ cent. Cotton was strong, being $2 to $2.50 a bale above the lows of last week.

Bond Market Strong

Listed bonds continued to reflect today a good part of the enthusiasm occasioned by the peace moves last week. United States Treasury issues showed material gains, and foreign government bonds likewise resumed the advance. High grade corporate bonds improved on fresh investment buying. Speculative issues surged forward rather more emphatically than did stocks. Turnover in all listed issues was $7,910,000.

Long term United States Treasury issues showed advances of 1-16 to ½ point, and most bonds closed less than a point under the highs of the year. Dealers reported good bank and insurance company inquiry. Guaranteed bonds of the farm and home corporations did well. In best corporate issues small gains were common, as the long famine of the new issues market is sending many inquiries to the list.

Czech 8s moved up another point each in quiet trading, partly because of the British announcement that funds may be made available to the dismembered country. German, Polish and Hungarian issues remained in demand. French and Belgian bonds rallied, and the British empire issues of Canada and Australia moved upward. Italians moved nearer to the highs of the year, while Japanese bonds showed modest improvement. Latin-American bonds were quiet and uncertain.

Speculative railroad obligations did well in the corporate list. Gains of a point or two appeared among the intermediate-priced interest payers, and small advances were recorded in default bonds and borderline issues. Convertible and holding company obligations were better on the good trend of equities. Local tractions remained a bright spot, and International Telephone bonds advanced again on the better foreign outlook.

Babson Sees Business Set For Quick Rise

Predicts Fall Upturn
Trade 10% Above June
Finds Cheer in London

Special Dispatch to The Post.

London, Oct. 3.—Roger Babson, in Europe to investigate business and war conditions, believes that the passing of the war crisis means that the recent barrier has been removed and that the long awaited business boom will now start. He said the latest turn of events justified his advice of the late summer to business men to forget Europe and other sensational headlines and to pay more attention to their own jobs.

Business in the United States, Babson continued, is 10 per cent above the low in June. This gain has come about in the face of the most depressive headlines. The purge, the war threat, and business men's pessimism have failed to halt the uptrend.

With the war hurdle out of the way, he said, American business should now rise steadily. He predicted that business activity will top the year-ago level sometime between now and Christmas. He reports that there is great joy in London and that business has already picked up over there.

Commodity prices were kept down by fear that the government would fix prices. All such fear, he says, has now been removed so that business can go on as usual. Improvement in business in England and the Continent, he said, further brightens prospects in the United States.

Argentina Frost Lifts Wheat Prices

Drought in Australia Visible Supply Gains Export Demand Lags

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Oct. 3.—Frost reports from Argentina, where crops are approaching a critical stage, did much to lift Chicago wheat prices half a cent a bushel today.

Word of persistent dry weather in Australia added to uneasiness about unfavorable conditions for crops south of the equator. Most traders, however, were disposed to await further developments relative to southern hemisphere field prospects.

Serving as a drag on upturns of values here was 801,000 bushels increase of the United States wheat visible supply total, contrasting with 1,573,000 bushels decrease a week ago. An additional handicap came from lack of any export demand of consequence for grain from this country, although indications were 500,000 bushels Canadian wheat had been bought for shipment overseas.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were ⅛@½ higher compared with Saturday's finish, December 64⅛@64¼, May 64¾@64⅞, corn ⅜@¾ down, December 46¾@46⅞, May 49⅝@49¾, oats unchanged to ⅛ up, rye unchanged, and provisions varying from 2 setback to 5 advance.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, Oct. 3 (AP) (United States Department of Agriculture)—Interest in wool was showing a broadening tendency in the Boston market today. Recent sales have included fleece and territory wools. Graded combing three-eighths blood bright fleece wools have brought 31 to 32 cents in the grease, with the scoured basis prices ranging 57 to 59 cents. A few purchases involving sizable quantities of fine territory wools in original bags have been made at prices ranging 63 to 65 cents, scoured basis, for good French combing lengths.

Press Advised To Discharge Boys Under 14

Now Big City Limit Group Sees Lenroot Also Talks to Andrews

By the Associated Press.

Elisha Hanson, general counsel for the American Newspaper Publishers Association, said yesterday he would advise publishers to "get rid of" newsboys under 14 years of age, and to obtain proof of age for all minor employes.

He said newspaper publishers in cities of 50,000 persons or more already had established a 14-year minimum under a "gentleman's agreement" made after the NRA was outlawed. Under the same agreement, he said, newspapers in cities of less than 50,000 had employed boys between 12 and 14 years of age.

"We are advising publishers now, irrespective of size of cities, to jack the minimum up to 14," Hanson said.

Hanson and a group of publishers also called on Elmer F. Andrews, wage-hour administrator. W. F. Wiley, of the Cincinnati Enquirer, said the meeting was "a purely inquisitive conference" at which "we didn't ask for any exemptions for anybody."

With Wiley and Hanson were: J. S. Gray, president of the Monroe, Mich., News; Roy A. Brown, president of the California Newspaper Publishers Association; Maj. Raymond B. Bottom, president of the Newport News Press and president of the Virginia Publishers Association; Howard W. Stodghill, New York, chairman of the A. N. P. A. newsboys committee; Eugene MacKinnon, Chicago, chairman of the A. N. P. A. standing committee on newspaper contracts.

Gallup Declares Third Term Near Impossibility

New Brunswick, N. J., Oct. 3 (AP).—Dr. George Gallup, director of the American Institute of Public Opinion, told a newspaper executives' dinner tonight it would be "almost impossible" for President Roosevelt to be re-elected for a third term.

Saying he based his statements on the results of Nation-wide polls he had conducted, he declared the majority of the people in the "upper half of society" were aginst a third term and also opposed to President Roosevelt.

In addition, he told 200 persons at a banquet ending the seventeenth annual New Jersey Newspaper Institute at Rutgers University, the President's program of Governmental reform and reorganization had caused "many of the masses" to shift their allegiance.

"Roosevelt's popularity always goes down when he attempts to put through a new bill, and always goes up when he goes fishing," he said.

Labor Party Backs Lehman For Governor

Follows Democrat Lead Action by Acclamation 1,000 Delegates Parade

By the Associated Press.

New York, Oct. 3.—Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, renominated by the Democrats for a fourth term, was given the nomination of the American Labor Party as well tonight.

The A. L. P. has predicted it will poll more than 500,000 votes in the November election.

Lehman was put in nomination by David Dubinsky, president of the International Ladies Garment Workers Union, as "the outstanding champion of liberalism in this great Empire State."

Senator Robert F. Wagner was nominated for re-election with an ovation as ear-splitting as that for the Governor. He also has been renominated by the Democratic Party.

A. F. L. Hits Labor Party

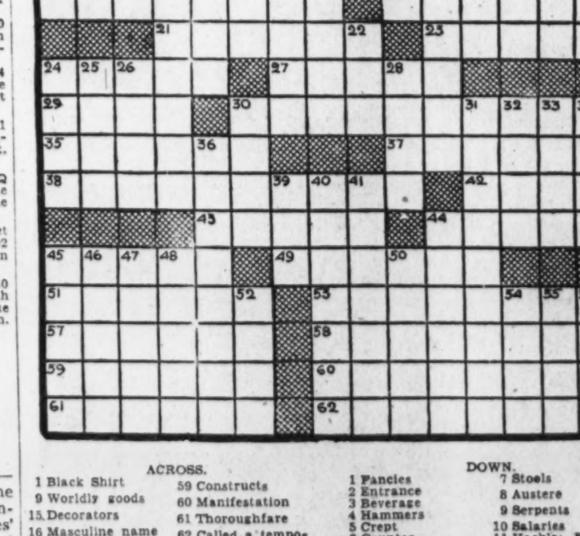

New York, Oct. 3.—George Meany, president of the State Federation of Labor and chairman of the American Federation of Labor Non-Partisan Campaign Committee, tonight charged that the American Labor Party is supporting "the known enemies of the cause of labor, because the American Labor Party bosses are completely unprincipled."

Life's Darkest Moment

Bob Burns Says—

Los Angeles is busy straightenin' up after playin' host to the American Legion, and in another three or four years, I doubt if you'll be able to look at the town and tell that the boys were here at all. Personally, I think these conventions are great things.

As one old fella says, "The public is fickle and are apt to forget that the boys went to France, but we'll never forget that they came to Los Angeles."

One old lady out here was very much annoyed at a bunch of legionnaires who were marchin' up the street, singin', blowin' horns and shootin' firecrackers, and she turned to an officer and said, "Officer, can't you stop these men?" and the officer says, "No, lady—an old man tried to stop those boys 20 years ago and he's still sawin' wood in Holland!"

The Federal Diary

By Scott Hart

By Scott Hart.

THE BOYS and girls in Uncle Sam's press release writing sections are like the coat and pants: They do all the work while vest gets all the gravy.

By this rather curious comparison, it is meant that the boys and girls are writing all those fine stories you see appearing under the names of bureau and division chieftains and the chieftains get all the money.

For example, one chief whose name is a household word from Maine to Canada, had an article in a magazine not so long ago. The article was written by a young fellow in the chief's press section. $500 was placed on the line for the story. Nice going, Chief!

The situation is this: The chief will declare to the press writers that a certain newspaper or magazine wants a story on this or that, and the story, of course, should be written because it affords a better and objective view on what the chief and his bureau are doing.

The press writer makes research, writes the article, under the chief's name and then, in time comes a check. These range from $50 to $500, and the check is payable to the gent whose name the story carried.

We know of one case wherein the story was signed by a lady, who didn't even know her name was being used or that the story was being written. A chief ordered the story and said he didn't care for it to carry his name. He suggested that the name of a lady in the office be used.

Then, in the time of harvest, came a check for $75. The lady was overwhelmed at first with surprise and then with jubilation. The young man in the press section did some broad hinting and insinuating, but that was all.

Carl Skinner, one of the Wall Street Journal's bright young men, is in the Government now and fitting his role beautifully. Long familiar with the Federal field, Skinner now is administrative assistant in the press section of the wage-hour division and is doing a nice job in a currently trying spot (because if any agency of Government is now being overwhelmed by requests for information it is the new and important wage-hour setpup.) While with the Wall Street Journal, Skinner, tall, blonde and well mannered, covered the Supreme Court, the Capitol and otherwise did labor news for his paper. In spare moments, he was secretary of the Washington Newspaper Guild.

A gentleman in the Triangle has the notion that someone should write a textbook for use in American schools of journalism describing the various techniques and the general practice of writing press releases in the Federal service.

His reason is interesting. He has undertaken some sort of survey, to learn that the journalism schools don't touch to any degree on the Federal field of writing. The gentleman considers that with the newspaper profession overcrowded, it might be an idea to teach the journalism students how to work for the Government's press sections, where many of them wind up anyhow.

We hate to point out that the reclassification in the WPA isn't proceeding as rapidly as some think. For example, we read in U. F. W. A.'s Local 1 paper that "reclassification of the entire administrative staff of WPA should be completed within 30 days," it was stated. Continuing, "according to Mr. Osthagen, approximately 1,000 employes have already been reclassified . . ." As best we can find out in the matter they are working on reclassification; much preliminary work has been done, but no actual reclassification.

Overheard in the corridor: "Whenever I take a trip on duty from Washington I only get $5 from the Government for my keep—and invariably my expenses are $7 a day. The worst thing to squeeze in are the taxi bills; they won't stand for taxis unless you can prove the Government will fall if you don't use one. But there's a consolation: the officials don't get but $5 a day, either. And they have to spend so lavishly to keep official face that their expenses must be nice, indeed.

Trees Dedicated To Bible Classmen

As local Bible class workers and leaders looked on memorial trees were dedicated at the corner of Eighth and H streets northwest Sunday to the late Homer J. Councilor, former associate pastor and teacher of the Vaughn Bible Class of Calvary Baptist Church; Dr. Albert Norman Ward, late president of Western Maryland College and former pastor of North Carolina M. P. Church, of Washington, and W. W. Millan, former head of the D. C. Sunday School Association.

Inspector W. H. Harrison, of the Harrison Class, of Congress Street Methodist Protestant Church, presided at the service, which was highlighted by brief addresses by Page McK. Etchison, president of the D. C. Organized Bible Class Assocation, who lauded Millan, who died a year ago; by Dr. Elmer L. Kayser, dean of George Washington University, who praised Dr. Ward, and by William R. Schmucker, treasurer of the Organized Bible Class group, sponsors of the program, who paid a tribute to Councilor, first president and cofounder of the Bible movement.

After each address, Mr. Schmucker placed earth from the campus of Western Maryland College at the foot of each tree, on which markers were placed. The Metropolitan Police Boys' Band furnished music. The Rev. Hirl A. Kester, Congress Street cleric, gave the invocation.

Shirley Povich will send in the play-by-play account, direct from the press box, and will write the lead story of the game. His daily column will give additional information about the drama of the game. Richards Vidmer will be up there, too, and his column will give his own viewpoint. Paul Mickelson will send stories covering sidelights of the game, and Rud Rennie, who knows the National League as thoroughly as Povich knows the American, will supply inside stories, diagnosis of plays, reasons why things break the way they do. To top all this off, there will be additional dressing room stories, interviews, and human interest yarns by Arch McDonald and the Associated Press, United Press, and New York Herald Tribune sports writers.
